Hitler Calls Italy, Soviet to War Council; 3 U-Boats Sunk; U. S. Ignores Peace Bid

President Hints Move Must Wait Direct Appeal By Belligerents

By William V. Nessly.
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt, in the absence of any official overtures from Berlin or other capitals looking toward United States mediation in the European war, appeared yesterday to be giving no consideration to unofficial German suggestions that he voluntarily act to restore peace.

The President, at his press conference, said in response to questions that he had received no official word from Germany on the subject, while reported Nazi insistence that any neutral peace move should come as a response to Fuehrer Hitler's Reichstag speech rather than wait on a formal proposal by Germany appeared to eliminate any likelihood of action here.

Mr. Roosevelt declared flatly that he had nothing to say regarding unofficial suggestions that he undertake mediation. His responses were taken to indicate determination that only a formal proposal from one of the belligerents would be considered by this Government.

The fact that Britain and France already have declared in effect that they cannot accept the basis for peace advanced by Hitler—recognition of the conquest of Poland—was accepted here as additional reason why President Roosevelt would not intervene.

Peace Group Urges Action

In this situation, the National Council for the Prevention of War, at its annual meeting here, adopted a resolution asking the President to call upon the European belligerents to declare a truce and to initiate consultations with other neutrals for creation of a neutral mediation commission to "work continuously" until a satisfactory "and lasting" peace is arrived at.

The association said its action was in line with reported pleas by British peace societies to Prime Minister Chamberlain for a negotiated settlement that would include development of a new colonial system and removal of trade barriers.

After disposing of the mediation talk in his biweekly session with newspapermen, the President revealed that United States representations to Russia against demands on Finland that would disturb the peace of the Baltic area were in the form of a personal message from him to President Kalinin of the Soviet Union.

Discussing the sending of the note, chronologically, Mr. Roosevelt said that on Monday of this week he began worrying about the apparent threat of an extension of war in the Baltic.

Pressure Move Denied

Tuesday, he said, diplomatic representatives of several Scandinavian nations called at the State Department and the White House and let it be known they were much concerned over the developments. There was no suggestion, however, of joint action, the President said.

The note to President Kalinin was drafted at the White House Wednesday morning, and later in the day, after his return from New York, Secretary of State Hull assisted the President in editing it.

The message expressed earnest hope that nothing would occur to disturb the Baltic peace or Finland's independence. Though it was sent to Moscow that afternoon, to be delivered by Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt, the action was not made public until after actual delivery of the note.

Lindley Answers Harlan Miller

Two days this week Harlan Miller devoted his "Over The Coffee" column to President Roosevelt's familiarity with European affairs and indicated this was an advantage in his shaping of America's foreign policy. In Sunday's Post Ernest Lindley replies with arguments that such familiarity is insufficient.

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 13.—This ancient town's annual tearjerker, the dog mart, didn't raise a whimper today. But 500 dogs barked and all of them smelled and the pale October day was warm and many an old mountain hound won't doze in his backyard any more.

There came the Fredericksburg dawn, and a few hours later the first yelp, then a series of yelps, then a bedlam of barks, then a confounding of yelps and barks and the town headed for the mart on the schoolhouse grounds, knowing that the town dogs and the mountain dogs, the nondescripts and the fair-to-middlin' dogs, were on the block and the annual tryst with sentiment, tears, business and ballyhoo for the town was underway.

WPA to Revive Arts Projects

President Approves $1,000,000 Fund For D. C. Program

Revival of three local WPA projects embracing literature, art and music and involving more than $1,000,000 has been approved by the President, it was announced yesterday by local officials.

The three projects, which were dropped last August 31, will be revived immediately and will form the basis of a broader plan for the District.

Capt. J. L. Person, Assistant Engineer Commissioner, outlined a program for the local WPA which was approved by the Commissioners.

Of the $1,231,679 program approved by the President, the Federal WPA will contribute $968,442, and local sponsors $263,237. Other projects included are adult education, historical records, toy repair, vocational rehabilitation and recreation. The personnel will be increased from 400 to 600.

Officials said that the directors

Safe Driver A Phantom

Post-WJSV Search For Careful Autoist Nets 5 Speeders

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Maybe Washington has plenty of safe drivers, but most of them must have been in hibernation yesterday. Those who weren't missed at least a dozen chances to receive The Post-WJSV safety award tags and the search for an "outstanding" careful motorist netted five speeders, a couple of stop-sign violators and a raft of smaller offenders. It was a little tough on the nerves, too.

Because the combined efforts of a Post observer and half a hundred traffic division policemen have failed to uncover a motorist deserving of the special tag award, the presentation program scheduled tonight at 10:15 o'clock over WJSV has been canceled. A day-long search by Policeman George Patton, District "safety" officer, and this reporter ended last night with-

French Pilot Downs 3 of Foe; Shot 10 Times, Another Lands

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 13.—Stories of flight adventures at the front, which prove the French airmen of 1939 are in no way behind their predecessors, Capt. George Guynemeer, Capt. Rene Fonck and Capt. Charles Nungesser, in daring and skill, are told in L'Intransigeant tonight by Merry Bromberger.

One young pilot, he tells, while flying high and alone over the Siegfried Line, spotted three Messerschmitts returning to their airfield at Saarebruck. Keeping high and unobserved behind them, until they lost speed for landing, he swooped down out of the blue and opened fire on one of the enemy planes with his machine gun at 50 yards. When it crashed, he swung over and attacked the second enemy plane, which also crashed.

The third pilot made a desperate effort to recover speed but before he could rise the French plane had him in position and, within less than a minute all three German planes were piled up in a heap on the airfield, where they had expected to land quietly.

Another story is of a sergeant pilot, who stuck to his plane, waiting for it to crash, but 300 feet from the ground the French pilot recovered control and soared back to attack. In the second encounter he was more successful and the German machine was driven down

English Steamer, Giant Tanker Are Destroyed By Torpedoes

By Raymond Daniell.

London, Oct. 13.—Three German submarines were destroyed today, the Admiralty announced. Some survivors were rescued by craft which sent the U-boats to the bottom, the announcement said.

The Admiralty's statement was welcomed by a public which began this Friday the thirteenth by learning that the 5,202-ton freighter, Heronspool, and the French ship Emile Miguet, one of the world's largest oil tankers, had been sunk by a submarine. The entire crew of 36 of the Heronspool was rescued by the United States liner President Harding, but when the President Harding arrived beside the Emile Miguet, hours later, the French ship was burning fiercely and there was no sign of her crew, indicating, according to London naval circles, that she had been torpedoed without warning and the crew was not able to escape.

Exigencies of war and censorship prevented disclosure of the exact locations where the freighter and the submarines were sunk, but it was remarked that the Admiralty's announcement of the greatest destruction of submarines in a single day since the war broke out, came soon after word was received here that six undersea raiders were operating in the Caribbean.

Churchill Report Recalled

The only prior announcement of success in the navy's war of extermination against submarines on which Germany counts to break the British blockade, came from Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty.

Reporting to the House of Commons on the part the navy was playing in the war the First Lord of Admiralty said that in the first fortnight of the war "six or seven" U-boats had been destroyed, and he estimated that this represented one-tenth of Germany's whole fleet or one-third of those actually at sea when the war began.

On that and subsequent occasions, Churchill said, it was against the policy of the Admiralty to be too specific because experience of the last war showed that the effect on the morale of the home folk and U-boat crews was worse when they were left guessing about the fate of the submarines. Obviously the Admiralty felt that today, truth was more devastating than mystery.

Secrecy Customary

Even in the last war, submarine sinkings were shrouded in secrecy for long periods. There were few occasions even when the Admiralty broke its rule of silence. One of these was the first anniversary of the battle of the Marne. Never before in this war has the Admiralty provided the public with a score sheet of a single day's operations against submarines.

The loss of the Heronspool was

Senate Session Called Today To Spur Action On Neutrality

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Administration leaders yesterday moved to shorten Senate debate on the President's neutrality program as the controversy rounded its second week without significant action.

Day-long negotiations between Majority Leader Barkley and opposition spokesmen failed to reach any agreement on a time limit and conferences to that end will be resumed today.

Barkley ordered a Saturday session in an effort to clear the long roster of speakers, then prepared to lengthen daily sessions next week, possibly convening the Senate at 11 a. m. and recessing at later hours.

Pittman Offers Formula

The leadership was represented as anxious to start the Senate voting on important amendments next week and, if possible, bring the bill to a final Senate showdown by the end of this month. Opposition leaders opposed any limitation on debate.

Meanwhile, Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee laid down a four-point formula he said must be met by all proposals to modify the bill's drastic restrictions on American ship movements to belligerent ports or possessions. His conditions were announced as three conflicting sets of amendments for broadening American war-trade rights in the Pacific and elsewhere were placed in his hands.

Pittman's formula barred any shipments to European belligerents, but would permit American ships to trade with belligerent possessions in the Pacific and elsewhere only when specifically licensed to do so.

Pittman said he would agree to no amendment unless:

There would appear to be little danger of loss of life of American seamen.

The National Munitions Control Board licenses shipments to sections now barred by the bill, with no licenses issued for articles and materials included in an arms list proclaimed by the President.

Provisions on Combat Zones

The President suspends such trade rights whenever transportation under them results in destruction of American ships or loss of lives by putting in force the bill's combat zone provisions.

All exceptions to the shipping ban terminate when the President shall have revoked all proclamations declaring a state of war to exist.

In a supplementary statement, Pittman said no proposal has been made to open up American ship traffic with belligerents in the European area, but only "as to areas remote from Europe." If American ships are permitted to travel even to remote possessions of belligerents,

Lindbergh for Sale Of 'Defensive Arms'

Powers Ought to Give Up American Colonies, He Says

Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, declaring that America is not "afraid of war" to defend "all that is vital to us," last night called on Great Britain and other powers with American possessions to withdraw from this hemisphere, which he called "our domain."

At the same time he urged a United States embargo on all "offensive weapons," unrestricted sale of "defensive armaments," barring of American shipping from belligerent countries of Europe and "their danger zones," and refusal of credit on belligerents' purchases here.

He thus took issue, in a measure, with the Administration, which seeks outright repeal of the present arms embargo, substituting cash-and-carry sales of munitions to all comers. He took issue, as well, with those Senators and others who contend it is to the interest of this country to make available to European democracies the weapons needed in their war with the dictator lands. Apparently his proposed restrictions on shipping would not conflict with the current move in Congress to lighten provisions of the pending neutrality bill so that American vessels might trade with

Sweden Calls Baltic Parley On Soviet Peril

Norwegian and Danish Kings, Finn President To Go to Stockholm

By the Associated Press

Stockholm, Oct. 13.—Sweden today called the Kings of Denmark and Norway and the President of Finland to confer here next Wednesday on their status in the European war and at the same time ordered strengthening of the Swedish-Finnish border, long a friendly frontier similar to that of Canada and the United States.

It was understood 10,000 additional men had been sent to the upper Norland border sector, in preparation for any eventuality between Finland and Russia.

The troop movement closely followed the conference invitation by Sweden's venerable King Gustaf.

The communique announcing acceptances by King Christian of Denmark, King Haakon of Norway and President Kyosti Kallio of Finland said they would be accompanied by their foreign ministers.

Swedish Loans Possible

It was not immediately disclosed what specific questions were to be discussed, but the fact that President Kallio's homeland is presently in a state of emergency—its capital deserted by many residents, its armed forces in readiness—makes it a foregone conclusion that Finland's situation in the face of Russian expansion in the Baltic will loom large in the conversations.

The discussions also are likely to deal with a program for mutual assistance in maintaining neutrality and how to lessen economic hardships created by the war.

U. S. Reaction To War Policy Pleases British

Bid for Mediation From Nazis Called New 'Trial Balloon'

By Frank R. Kelley.
Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Oct. 13.—Prime Minister Chamberlain and his closest advisers sat back today and surveyed with satisfaction the reaction in Europe and in the United States to the formal decision of Great Britain and France to prosecute relentlessly their war against Germany until Fuehrer Adolf Hitler proves by deeds that he really wants peace.

With the British press voicing unanimous approval of the prime minister's declaration in the House of Commons, Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax appended the comment in the House of Lords that Britain's conditions for peace were implicit where Chamberlain had not made them explicit.

Officials in Whitehall and Downing street examined and explained the reaction from Berlin today as expressed by Otto Dietrich, head of the Nazi press section.

"Another Trial Balloon"

Dietrich's remarks were taken page by page from the news tickers and handed to Chamberlain and Halifax for examination. Afterward a foreign office spokesman expressed the view that the Nazis appeared to be sending up "another trial balloon to induce President Roosevelt or some other neutral to step in and save Uncle Adolf from what's coming to him."

Dismissing as "a piece of terrific bluff" statements in the Nazi press to the effect that the war "will now begin in earnest" and the German air force "will now speak for itself," the British spokesman said he thought the Nazis were trying "to BRITAIN CLAIMED victory in first test of war, having successfully transported 158,000 soldiers to France without loss.

KING GUSTAF of Sweden invited the kings of Denmark and Norway and the president of Finland to confer, presumably on Russian situation. All three accepted the bid.

THE BRITISH Admiralty reported the sinking of three German submarines. Some survivors were rescued.

AMERICAN LINER, President Harding, rescued crew of 36 from sinking British freighter, Heronspool, 300 miles off the Irish coast, saw flaming French ship, Emile Miguet, large oil tanker, sunk without trace of crew.

FINNISH PRESIDENT ordered civilians to be ready for nonmilitary work in emergency.

British Front Line Termed Far Superior to 1914 Forces

By W. M. Chaplin
International News Service Staff Writer

With the British Expeditionary Forces On the Western Front, Oct. 13.—The British sector of the Western Front surged with activity today.

All day long I drove over roads crowded with lumbering guns, truck transports and supply lorries, and I realized that when Secretary for War Leslie Hore-Belisha said in Parliament that 158,000 English soldiers are holding the line in France he referred only to the forward positions.

How many more actually have crossed the English Channel and arrived in France—all of which was accomplished without a single casualty despite the U-boat menace—is a military secret, but even in this short time I have been in France I am convinced England is ready to play any part her destiny may demand.

With the first journalists permitted to join the British on the Western Front, I crossed the Channel Tuesday with a navy-escorted convoy carrying thousands more in the endless stream of British manpower which is pouring into France in a miracle of transportation which has completely defied all German efforts to dam it.

The young British soldiers are solemn at the thought of the duty

Reich Consults Partners on Next Move as Plea Is Denied

By Melvin K. Whiteleather
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berlin, Oct. 13.—Germany was reported tonight to have begun consultations with two of her pact partners, Soviet Russia and Italy, as a preliminary to her next major move in the European war.

Indignation over Prime Minister Chamberlain's rejection of Reichsfuehrer Hitler's proposals for ending the war swept through Nazi ranks.

An official press release said that Chamberlain had "rejected the hand of peace stretched out to him by the Fuehrer," and that Britain's war aims meant "war against the German people, war against the German Reich unto annihilation."

[The black Mercedes touring car in which Hitler, "Germany's first soldier," goes to war, was made ready for another expedition, the New York Herald-Tribune reported.

Hopes Disappear

[When he will leave was still uncertain, but it was expected to be soon, and his destination will be Germany's newest front—either the Siegfried Line or the air field on the north seacoast where the concrete runways for heavy bombers all point toward England.

[Attendants were busy putting dust covers over the furniture in the reception and conference rooms of his new chancellery, as they did six weeks ago at the start of the war in the east. The covers were taken off recently for a last-minute resort to Nazi diplomacy in the hope of winning the war in the west without fighting it. That hope has now disappeared.—Editor's note.]

Officialdom expressed a hope some neutral powerful enough, such as the United States, Nazis said, "in her own interest" would bring pressure on Britain to accept a peace conference as the Fuehrer suggested in his Reichstag speech just a week ago.

3 Bridges Blasted

A communique of the army high command said the French yesterday blew up three German-built bridges over the Rhine.

But from assertions in official quarters it appeared that such action would not be seized upon as a signal for heavy retaliation, although Germany, it was said, "has made her peace bid and will not make another."

Authoritative sources said neither the United States nor any other neutral would be asked formally to intervene in the European conflict.

These sources said that following Hitler's peace appeal of last week it was up to neutrals to make their voices heard on their own initiative and in consciousness of their responsibility—and not because Hitler or any other belligerent should ask them.

Britain Depends on United States

Dr. Otto Dietrich, Germany's press chief, early today expressed his opinion that the United States could put an end to the war if she unequivocally told Britain she would not support her unless efforts to settle the problems at issue first were made at the council table.

Dietrich said he based his opinion on a belief that Britain refused to accept Hitler's peace overtures because she was relying on getting help from the United States.

If Britain were told this help would not be forthcoming, he said, then there would be a chance of ending the war now.

Oil Firms Say They Rejected Rail Rate Bid

Refused Proposal As Against the Law, They Tell Inquirers

By the Associated Press

Counsel for two of the largest oil companies in the United States told the Monopoly Committee yesterday that they had rejected as "illegal" a proposal of major railroads for joint action against smaller competitors.

Edwin S. Hall, general counsel for the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, and Harry T. Klein, attorney for the Texas Oil Co., testified that they refused an offer from the Association of American Railroads in January, 1937, as a probable "violation of Federal and State antitrust laws."

During the long hearing, which ran into the evening, the names of President Roosevelt, Secretary Ickes and scores of railroads and oil companies were mentioned.

Collusion Charged

Charges of "connivance and collusion" betwen the major oil companies and railroads were raised by Eugene L. Orvis, traffic attorney from Jersey City, N. J., who was halted in his first attempt to testify before the Monopoly Committee on October 5 by Chairman O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, until committee attendants verified letters and other documents.

Most important of the sheaf of letters Orvis produced yesterday was one from J. J. Pelley, president of the Railroad Association, representing most of the major officials, to officials of 13 major oil companies.

Orvis testified that under the Pelley proposal trucks competing with railroads in carrying oil were to be eliminated through railroad rate reductions, and independent competitors of major oil companies were to be placed at a disadvantage as to railroad rates and leasing of trackside properties.

Letters in Dispute

Chairman O'Mahoney broke in to verify the Pelley proposal but also read a recent letter from the railroad spokesman saying the proposal was never put into operation.

Orvis disputed this and offered letters from truck operators and independent oil producers and court and rate documents in an effort to show "the Pelley proposals actually were carried out."

After this testimony, counsel for the two major oil companies asked to be heard. Hall, spokesman for Standard, said that he was "seriously disturbed" at possible violations of anti-trust laws and asked a conference with railroad officials.

This, Hall testified, was held later with J. Carter Fort, counsel, and A. F. Cleveland, vice president of the railroad association, and Klein, Texas counsel.

Hall said that the oil companies would not participate in the proposal unless "we received immunity from anti-trust law prosecution from President Roosevelt or Secretary Ickes."

It was explained that National Recovery Administration codes then were in operation, under which anti-trust exemptions could be granted by the President or Ickes.

Hall and Klein said they dropped any attempts to obtain this exemption when they learned public hearings would be necessary.

"That was the absolute end of the Pelley proposals so far as Standard Oil of New Jersey was concerned," Hall said emphatically.

U. S. Is Not Afraid, Says Lindbergh

whose waters are not considered danger zones.

Speaking over the Mutual Broadcasting System, Lindbergh warned that "we must be ready to wage war" if an attack is threatened on the area from Hawaii to Bermuda, from Alaska to Labrador, from Canada to South America.

"Sooner or later," he declared, "we must demand the freedom of this continent and its surrounding islands from the dictates of European power. . . . As long as European powers maintain their influence in our hemisphere, we are likely to find ourselves involved in their troubles. And they will lose no opportunity to involve us."

While he declared this country would assist Canadians if their homeland were attacked, he asked whether they had "the right to draw this hemisphere into a European war simply because they prefer the crown of England to American independence."

His prohibition of foreign power in this continent presumably would apply to Canada, Bermuda, the Bahamas; British, French and Dutch Guiana, and many British and French owned islands off South America.

Seeking, apparently, to clear up what he has said was widespread misunderstanding of his previous radio address, in which he urged avoidance of any involvement in the European war, the noted flier undertook to differentiate between "offensive" and "defensive" implements of war, a point previously raised by former President Hoover.

Conceding that the two types cannot be separated completely, he said there are many clear-cut examples. He cited bombing planes and bombs as offensive munitions, and antiaircraft guns as in the defensive category.

"I do not want to see American bombers dropping bombs which will kill and mutilate European children . . ." he said, "but I am perfectly willing to see American antiaircraft guns shooting American shells at invading bombers over any European country."

He declared that repealing the present arms embargo would not assist democracy in Europe, because "this is a war over the balance of power in Europe" instead of a "war for democracy."

It was brought about, he said, "by the desire for strength on the part of Germany and the fear of strength on the part of England and France. The more munitions the armies obtain, the longer the war goes on, and the more devastated Europe becomes, the less hope there is for democracy."

Opposing credits to warring powers, Lindbergh recalled how the European nations defaulted on their World War debts.

"They called us Uncle Shylock," he said . . . "They seized the German colonies and carved up Europe to suit their fancy. These were the 'fruits of war' . . . But there was not the offer of one Caribbean island in return for the debts 'they could not afford to pay.'"

Barkley and Chandler at the President's Door

Harris & Ewing

Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley (left) and newly appointed Senator A. B. "Happy" Chandler, last year's rivals in one of Kentucky's hottest primary campaigns, walked side-by-side into the White House yesterday to visit President Roosevelt. Senator Chandler told reporters that the President told him "the only reason he objected to me before was that he did not want me to unseat Alben to get here"

Yesterday was a big day for Senator A. B. ("Happy") Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky, despite the fact it was Friday the thirteenth.

He received a hearty welcome from President Roosevelt when he called at the White House with his one-time political enemy, Alben Barkley, senior Senator from Kentucky.

Later, Vice President Garner called upon Chandler to preside over the Senate for a short while.

The new Senator said:

"Mr. Roosevelt told me that he was glad to have me here. The only reason he was against me before was that he didn't want Alben thrown out to get me here, which I understood."

Chandler ran against Barkley last year for the senatorial nomination but Barkley won with the indorsement of Roosevelt. Chandler was appointed to succeed the late Senator M. M. Logan.

Text of Col. Lindbergh's Radio Address

Tonight I speak again to the people of this country who are opposed to the United States entering the war which is now going on in Europe. We are faced with the need of deciding on a policy of American neutrality. The future of our Nation and of our civilization rests upon the wisdom and foresight we use. Much as peace is to be desired, we should realize that behind a successful policy of neutrality must stand a policy of war. It is essential to define clearly those principles and circumstances for which a Nation will fight. Let us give no one the impression that America's love for peace means that she is afraid of war, or that we are not fully capable and willing to defend all that is vital to us. National life and influence depend upon national strength, both in character and in arms. A neutrality built on pacifism alone will eventually fail.

Before we can intelligently enact regulations for the control of our armaments, our credit and our ships, we must draw a sharp dividing line between neutrality and war; there must be no gradual encroachment on the defense of our Nation. Up to this line we may adjust our affairs to gain the advantages of peace, but beyond it must lie all the armed might of America, coiled in readiness to spring if once this bond is cut. Let us make clear to all countries where this line lies. It must be both within our intent and our capabilities. There must be no question of trading or bluff in this hemisphere. Let us give no promises we cannot keep—make no meaningless assurances to an Ethiopia, a Czecho-Slovakia or a Poland. The policy we decide upon should be as clear cut as our shorelines, and as easily defended as our continent.

This Western Hemisphere is our domain. It is our right to trade freely within it. From Alaska to Labrador, from the Hawaiian Islands to Bermuda, from Canada to South America, we must allow no invading army to set foot. These are the outposts of the United States. They form the essential outline of our geographical defense. We must be ready to wage war with all the resources of our Nation if they are ever seriously threatened. Their defense is the mission of our Army, our Navy, and our Air Corps—the minimum requirement of our military strength. Around these places should lie our line between neutrality and war. Let there be no compromise about our right to defend or trade within this area. If it is challenged by any nation, the answer must be war. Our policy of neutrality should have this as its foundation.

We must protect our sister American nations from foreign invasion, both for their welfare and our own. But, in turn, they have a duty to us. They should not place us in the position of having to defend them in America while they engage in wars abroad. Can we rightfully permit any country in America to give bases to foreign warships, or to send its army abroad to fight while it remains secure in our protection at home? We desire the utmost friendship with the people of Canada. If their country is ever attacked, our Navy will be defending their seas, our soldiers will fight on their battlefields, our fliers will die in their skies. But have they the right to draw this hemisphere into a European war simply because they prefer the crown of England to American independence?

Sooner or later we must demand the freedom of this continent and its surrounding islands from the dictates of European power. American history clearly indicates this need. "As long as European powers maintain their influence in our hemisphere, we are likely to find ourselves involved in their troubles. And they will lose no opportunity to involve us."

Our Congress is now assembled to decide upon the best policy for this country to maintain during the war which is going on in Europe. The legislation under discussion involves three major issues—the embargo of arms, the restriction of shipping, and the allowance of credit. The action we take in regard to these issues will be an important indication to ourselves, and to the nations of Europe, whether or not we are likely to enter the conflict eventually as we did in the last war. The entire world is watching us. The action we take in America may either stop or precipitate this war.

Let us take up these issues, one at a time, and examine them. First the embargo of arms: It is argued that the repeal of this embargo would assist democracy in Europe, that it would let us make a profit for ourselves from the sale of munitions abroad, and at the same time, help to build up our own arms industry.

I do not believe that repealing the arms embargo would assist democracy in Europe, because I do not believe this is a war for democracy. This is a war over the balance of power in Europe—a war brought about by the desire for strength on the part of Germany and the fear of strength on the part of England and France. The more munitions the armies obtain, the longer the war goes on, and the more devastated Europe becomes, the less hope there is for democracy. That is a lesson we should have learned from our participation in the last war. If democratic principles had been applied in Europe after that war, if the "democracies" of Europe had been willing to make some sacrifice to help democracy in Europe while it was fighting for its life, if England and France had offered a hand to the struggling republic of Germany, there would be no war today.

If we repeal the arms embargo with the idea of assisting one of the warring sides to overcome the other, then why mislead ourselves by talk of neutrality? Those who advance this argument should admit openly that repeal is a step toward war. The next step would be the extension of credit, and the next would be the sending of American troops.

To those who argue that we could make a profit and build up our own industry by selling munitions abroad, I reply that we in America have not yet reached a point where we wish to capitalize on the destruction and death of war. I do not believe that the material welfare of this country needs, or that our spiritual welfare could withstand, such a policy. If our industry depends upon a commerce of arms for its strength, then our industrial system should be changed. It is impossible for me to understand how America can contribute to civilization and humanity by sending offensive instruments of destruction to European battlefields. This would not only implicate us in war, but it would also make us partly responsible for its devastation. The fallacy of helping to defend a political ideology, even though it be somewhat similar to our own, was clearly demonstrated to us in the last war. Through our help that war was won, but neither the democracy nor the justice for which we fought grew in the peace that followed our victory.

Our bond with Europe is a bond of race and not of political ideology. We had to fight an European army to establish democracy in this country. It is the European race we must preserve; political progress will follow. Social strength is vital—politics, a luxury. If the white race is ever seriously threatened, it may then be time for us to take our part in its protection, to fight side by side with the English, French and Germans, but not with one against the other for our mutual destruction.

Let us not dissipate our strength, or help Europe to dissipate hers, in these wars of politics and possession. For the benefit of Western civilization, we should continue our embargo on offensive armaments. As far as purely defensive arms are concerned, I, for one, am in favor of supplying European countries with as much as we can spare of the material that falls within this category. There are technicians who will argue that offensive and defensive arms cannot be separated completely. That is true, but it is no more difficult to make a list of defensive weapons than it is to separate munitions of war from semi-manufactured articles, and we are faced with that problem today. No one says that we should sell opium because it is difficult to make a list of narcotics. I would as soon see our country traffic in opium as in bombs. There are certain borderline cases, but there are plenty of clear cut examples: For instance, the bombing plane and the anti-aircraft cannon. I do not want to see American bombers dropping bombs which will kill and mutilate European children, even if they are not flown by American pilots. But I am perfectly willing to see American anti-aircraft guns shooting American shells at invading bombers over any European country. And I believe that most of you who are listening tonight will agree with me.

The second major issue for which we must create a policy concerns the restrictions to be placed on our shipping. Naval blockades have long been accepted as an element of warfare. They began on the surface of the sea, followed the submarine beneath it, and now reach up into the sky with aircraft. The laws and customs which were developed during the surface era were not satisfactory to the submarine. Now, aircraft bring up new and unknown factors for consideration. It is simple enough for a battleship to identify the merchantman she captures. It is a more difficult problem for a submarine if that merchantman may carry cannon; it is safer to fire a torpedo than to come up and ask. For bombing planes flying at high altitudes and through conditions of poor visibility, identification of a surface vesel will be more difficult still.

In modern naval blockades and warfare, torpedoes will be fired and bombs dropped on probabilities rather than on certainties of identification. The only safe course for neutral shipping at this time is to stay away from the warring countries and dangerous waters of Europe.

The third issue to be decided relates to the extension of credit.

Here again we may draw from our experience in the last war. After that war was over, we found ourselves in the position of having financed a large portion of the expenditures of European countries. And when the time came to pay us back, these countries simply refused to do so. They not only refused to pay the wartime loans we made, but they refused to pay back what we loaned them after the war was over. As is so frequently the case, we found that loaning money eventually created animosity instead of gratitude. European countries felt insulted when we asked to be repaid. They called us "Uncle Shylock." They were horror struck at the idea of turning over to us any of their islands in America to compensate for their debts, or for our help in winning their war. They seized all the German colonies and carved up Europe to suit their fancy. These were the "fruits of war." They took our money and they took our soldiers. But there was not the offer of one Caribbean island in return for the debts they "could not afford to pay." Extension of credit to a belligerent country is a long step toward war, and it would leave us close to the edge. If American industry loans money to a belligerent country, many interests will feel that it is more important for that country to win than for our own to avoid the war. It is unfortunate but true that there are interests in America who would rather lose American lives than their own dollars. We should give them no opportunity.

I believe that we should adopt as our program of American neutrality as our contribution to Western civilization—the following policy:

1. An embargo on offensive weapons and munitions.
2. The unrestricted sale of purely defensive armaments.
3. The prohibition of American shipping from the belligerent countries of Europe and their danger zones.
4. The refusal of credit to belligerent nations or their agents.

Whether or not this program is adopted depends upon the support of those of us who believe in it. The United States of America is a democracy. The policy of our country is still controlled by our people. It is time for us to take action. There has never been a greater test for the democratic principle of government.

Exports Show 14% Gain in September

Shipments Value Placed at $283,000,000; Canada's Trade Up

Exports from the United States in September, according to preliminary figures, were 14 per cent greater in value than in August, despite the war, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins declared yesterday.

The value of shipments was placed at $283,000,000. This compares with $248,148,000 in August. It is 16 per cent greater than the $243,595,000 valuation placed on exports in September, 1938.

Purchases of United States merchandise by Canada and Latin-American countries, Hopkins said, were almost without exception greater than in August, and greater in most cases than in September, 1938. Shipments to all trade regions, in fact, were up last month as compared with August and the year before.

Gold May Be Used

Hopkins emphasized, however, that it was not clear from the figures just how the war had affected exports which normally would have been made in September. It will be necessary to await this month's and perhaps the November figures before reaching any conclusion on this point, he said.

Other developments bearing on trade problems were:

President Roosevelt said negotiations were almost ready to start for use of part of the Treasury's record gold hoard to stabilize the banking systems of two Latin-American countries, which he did not name.

Senator Clark, Missouri Democrat, said he wanted to know whether the Treasury, through its $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, was going to support the British pound in international exchange now that war is on.

The President, in response to a question concerning a proposal by Senator La Follette, Wisconsin Progressive, that gold be used to stabilize Latin-American banking systems and for direct investments in those countries, said this general problem had been studied for three years.

Banking Aid Considered

Means for extending monetary and banking aid, it is understood, will be considered at the Pan American conference of Treasury representatives at Guatemala City next month. Undersecretary of the Treasury John W. Hanes has arranged to attend as this country's representative.

Treasury officials, in reply to Clark's query, said the stabilization fund never had operated in sterling, except at the request of the British government and subject to daily settlement of accounts. Moreover, now that Great Britain has gone in for exchange control, these operations have been suspended.

Hopkins pointed out that there is usually a seasonal increase in trade in September. A curtailment in exports in the first half of the month, due to disturbed shipping and trade conditions, led to the belief that September exports would be below August. Shipments in the last half of the month, however, offset the curtailment in the first half.

Re-Exports Heavy

It is impossible to determine at this time, Hopkins said, to what extent exports in the last half of the month may have included shipments which would have been made in October except for the war.

Canada, the United Kingdom and Japan—the three principal buyers of United States merchandise—accounted for the largest increases in exports to individual countries in September.

Preliminary compilations, Hopkins declared, indicate that the value of exports of domestic products in September was greater than for any month since January, 1938. Re-exports of foreign merchandise, especially of rubber, also were heavy.

Dies Committee Doesn't Legally Exist, Writer Says

Fraser S. Gardner, magazine writer indicted for perjury before the House Committee on Unamerican Activities, yesterday withdrew his plea of not guilty in order to file in the District Court an attack on the legal existence of the committee.

The legal point was raised in a demurrer filed for Gardner by Attorneys James F. Reilly and T. Hunter Creech. They claimed the committee, which is headed by Representative Martin S. Dies (Democrat), of Texas, ceased to exist when the term of the Seventy-fifth Congress expired last January 3. Speaker Bankhead, they argued, did not reappoint the committee when the Seventy-sixth Congress convened, so that when Gardner appeared to testify the committee had no legal existence. Consequently, the lawyers said, nothing Gardner said in his testimony would amount to perjury.

Gardner's demurrer also contended that the indictment was vague and uncertain and failed to charge an offense against the United States.

Dies Witness Lists 20 Unions as Overrun By Communists; Names Ogpu Agents in U.S.

Labor Official Tells Of Red Activities at Washington Navy Yard

By John B. Oakes.
Post Staff Writer

A man described as "a high union official" secretly informed the Dies Committee yesterday of past Communist activity at the Washington Navy Yard, while a witness in open hearing stated that "for years" a Communist nucleus had existed in the navy yard in Brooklyn.

Appearing voluntarily, the "union official" gave to a committee representative the names of two alleged Communists at the navy yard here, The Post learned. It is understood, however, that he did not maintain that communism is rife among navy yard employes at the present time.

The alleged Communist group at the Brooklyn Navy Yard was described in testimony by Maurice Malkin, who said he was a member of the Communist Party from its founding in 1920 until 1938, when he was sent to Sing Sing Prison for felonious assault.

Served as Arms Spies

The witness, a blond, wavy-haired American citizen born in Russia 39 years ago, asserted that members of the Communist group at the Brooklyn Navy Yard relayed information about armaments and calibers of guns to their superiors in the party heirarchy, through whom it reached Moscow.

Speaking English with a noticable accent, Malkin named a group of alleged Soviet secret police (Ogpu) agents in the United States, including Alexander Trachtenberg, of New York, who testified a few weeks ago before the committee.

Malkin also named more than 20 American unions which he said are Communist-led or dominated. He asserted that Communists employed gangsters in New York and in the 1926 fur strike paid certain members of the New York police force $110,000 to close their eyes to strong-arm tactics of the fur union.

He said Arnold Rothstein, notorious New York gambler murdered in 1928, loaned the fur union $1,750,000 in 1926. It was some of this money, said Malkin, that went into the pockets of New York police.

N. Y. Police Get Transcript

As soon as he heard of Malkin's statements, New York Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine sent Inspector Michael Murphy by plane to Washington. After a conference with Dies, Murphy was promised a transcript of the testimony.

Apparently incredulous, Dies warned Malkin he was alleging "a very serious thing." Malkin, however, insisted that at a Communist Party fraction meeting in New York, he had heard "the chairman of the law committee" give a report on the alleged bribery.

Malkin alleged that the following leaders of unions are Communists, or fellow travelers: Donald Henderson, cannery workers, C. I. O.; James B. Carey, electrical workers, C. I. O.; Lewis Merrill office workers, C. I. O.; Ben Gold, fur workers, C. I. O.; Joseph Curran, maritime workers, C. I. O.; Michael Quill, transport workers, C. I. O.; Marcel Scherer, architects, engineers, chemists and technicians, C. I. O.; Rubin and Michael Obermeyer, hotel trades, A. F. L.; Jack Johnstone, packing house workers, C. I. O.; Wyndham Mortimer, automobile workers, C. I. O., and Mervyn Rathbone, communications workers, C. I. O.

Other unions which, he said, had strong ties with Communists include newspaper guild, C. I. O.; furniture workers, A. F. L.; United American artists, C. I. O., headed by Rockwell Kent; pharmacists, C. I. O.; hospital workers, C. I. O.; State, county and municipal employes, C. I. O.; tug boat, C. I. O.; pocketbook workers, A. F. L.; marine machinists; retail salesmen, C. I. O., and Italian actors.

Unknown to Guild Official

Malkin included in the list Local 453 of the American Federation of Teachers, and Local 802, American Federation of Musicians, A. F. of L.

Malkin said he had helped the newspaper guild, but an Associated Press dispatch from New York reported a denial from Morris Watson, an officer of the guild. Watson pointed out: "I would certainly have known him if he were an organizer because I was very active in the formation of the guild." Heywood Broun, guild president, and Watson denied they were Communists.

Malkin told the committee that Ogpu agents in America are headed by Trachtenberg and one "Dirba" whose first name he did not know. Dirba, alias Lapin, is a Latvian living in New York, who is chairman of the central control committee of the Communist Party, Malkin said.

Other Ogpu agents he named include: Anna Louise Strong, writer on Russia; Margaret Unjus, wife of Charles Krumbein, New York State secretary of the party; George Mink; Philip Ahrenberg, who allegedly belonged to the central committee of the party, and one Lozodsky, identified as "chief of the Ogpu American section in Spain." The last-named agent, said Malkin, was once "sent to Mexico to shoot Trotzky."

When Malkin had finished reciting his list of alleged Ogpu agents, Dies commented: "It's almost unbelievable that agents of the Russian government are operating in the United States right now. It would be hard for the chairman to believe this, were it not for other information we have received. In fact, I believe the United States Government has the same information."

Malkin said Communists in trade unions "will use the union treasury for the benefit of the party." He asserted that "they would hire gangsters, such as 'Legs' Diamond and 'Little Augie,' to do special work, that is, to beat up various people."

The witness said he himself was sent to Sing Sing on conviction of assault in the 1926 furriers' strike in which several persons were injured. Rothstein, he said, not merely loaned money to the allegedly Communist-dominated union, but "was supposed to put us in touch with the New York gangsters" who would do the "guerilla work" for the union.

Peace Group Involved

Malkin stated that the American League for Peace and Democracy was "Communist controlled" and the International Labor Defense was "a strictly Communist organization."

He mentioned as "rich fellow travelers," A. A. Heller, of New York; Clarina Michaelson, head of the Retail Salesmen Union, and Grace Burnham, New York real estate owner.

Socialists Here Protest Seizure Of Brief Case

Party Records, Found In Car by Police, Given To Dies Committee

Washington's Police Department, in turning over a brief case to the Dies Committee, was guilty of "a clear case of larceny," the Washington local of the Socialist Party charged yesterday.

In the brief case, which was taken from the automobile of Roland E. Parrish, secretary of the Washington local, were records and a list of Washingtonians who belong to the Socialist Party.

Apparently it was all a mistake, a circumstance, however, that did little to appease the wrath of local Socialists, who have about as much use for Communists and Fascists as has Representative Dies himself.

Case History

Police officials announced late yesterday that the brief case had been returned to Secretary Parrish, and they made this explanation:

The brief case, with its records and membership lists, was turned over to Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, on October 6, by E. C. Butterfield, superintendent of the Agriculture Department's experimental farm in Arlington, Va. Butterfield said the brief case was taken from an apparently abandoned automobile (Secretary Parrish's automobile), the night before by a Government night watchman.

Believing that the automobile had been stolen—it was near midnight when the watchman found it, with the brief case on a seat—Butterfield called Inspector Thompson, who sent Lieut. Joseph Shimon to investigate. Shimon took the brief case and turned it over to Lieut. Horace Lineburg, who, as chief of the public relations squad, keeps an eye on "Reds" and other troublemakers in Washington.

Accounts Vary

At this point, the explanations given to newspapermen diverge.

Chairman Dies said that somebody in the Police Departmnet telephoned to the committee to say that some interesting material had been found in an automobile.

However, Dies said, Lieut. Lineberger suggested that, for the protection of the Police Department, the House Committee to Investigate Undercover Activities issue a subpena for Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, to surrender the brief case. This was done, Dies said, and the committee got the brief case.

Returned to Police

"The material was brought to our offices in the old House Office Building," Dies continued, "and we then learned on looking it over that it related to the Socialist Party.

"As we aren't interested in investigating the Socialist Party, we returned the material to the police."

The Texan emphasized that he had not ordered seizure of the material, but had agreed to issue the subpena after the police had told the committee the material might be of interest.

Thompson's Story

Inspector Thompson said a representative of the Dies Committee called at headquarters for a brief case. He said he called the same morning that Secretary Parrish appeared at headquarters to reclaim it, and was shown the subpena.

Inspector Thompson said that he hadn't the "slightest idea" how the Dies Committee came to know the police had got possession of the brief case. He was sure no police official had notified the committee.

According to the statement issued yesterday by the executive committee of the Socialist Party, Secretary Parrish made several attempts to recover the brief case only to be told that it was being held as "abandoned property." The statement pointed out that, under District regulations, six months must elapse and search must be made for the owner before any property can be considered as "abandoned."

Nothing to Hide

"We have no activities that we need or care to hide," said the statement. "Our membership list can be inspected at any time . . . We are part, of course, of the Socialist Party of America, headed by Norman Thomas, which has no connection with any foreign government.

"The police department's action in this instance is a clear case of larceny of private property. It represents a reckless disregard of our rights and the department's own rules. If such illegal procedure can be taken against our organization, no liberal group may consider itself safe from a wanton invasion of its rights."

Successor to Cox Chosen; Neutrality Delays Nomination

A successor to the late Justice Joseph W. Cox, of District Court, already has been chosen, Attorney General Murphy indicated yesterday after a Cabinet meeting. No nomination will be sent to the Senate, however, until the neutrality issue has been settled.

At the beginning of the special session the White House made it clear no nominations would be sent up during neutrality debate. This decision affected new and recess appointments.

Speculation over Justice Cox's successor has brought into prominence the name of District Attorney David A. Pine, who has been indorsed by many professional and civic organizations. Murphy pointed out yesterday, however, that the candidate's name would have to be made public by the President.

Senators Ask $50,000,000 Farm Relief

Newly Formed Bloc Says Drought Has Created Emergency

By the Associated Press

A hastily formed but powerful Senate farm bloc decided yesterday to enlist support of House leaders before asking President Roosevelt to approve an emergency rural relief appropriation of $50,000,000 or more at the special session of Congress.

Senators from farm regions which have been hard hit by crop failures this season said they expected to win Presidential approval for the funds, despite Mr. Roosevelt's expressed view that legislation in the special session should be limited to neutrality legislation.

"There may be some resistance," said Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama, who presided at a meeting of the farm bloc, "but this is an emergency measure. It's like a hurricane or cyclone. There is actual suffering that has developed since Congress was called, and it will get worse."

A committee composed of Senators Bankhead, Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska; Capper (Republican), of Kansas; Mead (Democrat), of New York, and Connally (Democrat), of Texas, was designated to outline a program that could be speeded through Congress.

Bankhead said this group had decided to call for House support before consulting President Roosevelt "because any appropriation measure must originate in the House and members there are keenly aware of the emergency."

He added that he had consulted with Speaker Bankhead, who is his brother, and that a joint Senate-House group would call upon the President as soon as the program had been completed.

Under present plans, the funds would be appropriated for the Farm Security Administration and Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation to be used to buy food for humans and feed for livestock.

FSA officials told the Senate conference that crop reverses in several regions had placed 120,000 additional farm families on their relief load. Adverse rural conditions were said to prevail in 27 States.

N.Y. Woman Gives Pet Venezuelan Bush Dog to Zoo

Mrs. Carlos A. Freeman's loss was the Zoo's gain yesterday.

In giving up a pet, the New York woman favored National Zoological Park with the second South American bush dog it ever had and one which is believed to be the only specimen of its kind now in captivity.

The bush dog has a sing-song whine, instead of a bark. Its tail is short and the feet are partly webbed. This one is 11 weeks old and the size of a house cat.

Andrews Charges Railroads Violate Redcap Wage Order

Court Test Planned to Enforce Law Providing Minimum Pay Scale for Porters; Tip Angle Advanced by Carriers

Wage-Hour Administrator Andrews said yesterday that railroads have sought to avoid payment of a 25-cent hourly minimum wage to "red caps" by "agreements which clearly violate the spirit of the fair labor standards act."

He said the Administration would seek an early court test of the agreements, described as "accounting and guarantee arrangements," and in the meantime will call for more detailed records of red caps' hours and earnings, through amendment of record-keeping regulations.

Center of the controversy between railroads and red caps, Andrews explained, is whether tips can be classified as wages under the terms of the fair labor standards act.

"In effect," said Andrews, "the railroads have attempted to use the tips paid to railroad employes by the traveling public as a means of paying off the debt due from employer to employe under a Federal statute—payment of wages by the employer at the rate of 25 cents an hour.

"The red caps have been caught between two forces. Many people, believing that the railroads were paying all their employes wages aside from tips equal to or in excess of the 25 cent minimum, have refused to tip. But the typical red cap of most companies has not received any such wages from his employer."

Andrews commended the railroads who pay red caps a salary aside from tips, but declared they were "all too few." He said that a majority of the railroads, just before the act went into effect in October, 1938, and started the "accounting and guarantee" arrangements with the red caps, whereby the latter are required to account to the railroads for their tips so that with "make-up pay" it could be shown that they were receiving the 25-cent minimum.

Pending court ruling on such contracts, Andrews said the new amendment, in effect today, requiring a breakdown recording of tips and other compensation, is "necessary to protect the interests of all concerned."

WPA to Revive Art Projects Here

$100,000,000 In Pay Raises Due Oct. 24

U. S. Minimum Wage Steps Up to 30 Cents, Hour Limit Cut to 42

By the Associated Press

Officials estimated yesterday that 650,000 American workers would receive pay increases and an additional 1,100,000 would get shorter hours or overtime pay when automatic changes under the wage-hour law become effective October 24.

On that date, the law provides that 30 cents an hour shall become the minimum wage and 42 hours the maximum workweek for workers whose products move in interstate commerce. The standards will replace the 25-cent hourly minimum and 44-hour maximum week in effect for the first year of the act's operation.

At the same time, 175,000 textile workers are expected to get pay increases under the 32½ cent hourly minimum ordered for their industry by Elmer F. Andrews, wage-hour administrator, on recommendation of the textile industry committee.

$100,000,000 Involved

An estimated 46,000 hosiery workers, meanwhile, are receiving wage increases which become effective September 18 as a result of the 32½ and 40 cent minima ordered for the seamless and full-fashioned divisions, respectively.

Preliminary figures place the total wage increase expected from the higher standards for all industries at $100,000,000 for the year beginning October 24.

It works like this: On October 24 a worker getting the present minimum wage of 25 cents an hours or $11 for a 44-hour week must be paid 30 cents an hour, or $12.60 for a 42-hour week.

Wage-hour officials estimate that 450,000 employes in the United States, employing in excess to 12,000,000 persons, are covered by the act.

Hours Shorter Next Year

Other wage increases generally are expected by wage-hour officials to follow those due directly to the advance of the legal minimum rates. Employers testifying at hearings in the past year have said that relative pay increase for employes in higher brackets were found necessary as a result of raising wages of the lowest bracket.

The general pay minimum will remain at 30 cents until 1945, although the 42-hour week will be reduced to 40 hours on October 24, 1940.

Seven of the nine industry committees already established under the law have recommended minima higher than 30 cents, although some of them have not yet submitted formal reports.

Roosevelt To Confer on Refugee Aid

Representatives of 32 Nations Will Meet Here Today

President Roosevelt announced yesterday that he would confer with officers of the intergovernmental committee on political refugees at a White House luncheon next Tuesday.

Among those present, State Department officials said, will be Paul Van Zeeland, former prime minister of Belgium and chairman of the coordinating foundation set up some time ago to take over some committee functions.

Taylor to Attend

Others who will attend are Lord Winterton, committee chairman; Sir Herbert Emerson, director; Myron C. Taylor, former chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation and a vice chairman of the committee; Count de Saint-Quentin, French Ambassador; Carlos Martins, Brazilian Ambassador; Senor Don Felipe A. Espil, Ambassador from Argentina; Dr. A. Loudon, Netherlands Minister, and James G. McDonald, New York, chairman of the President's advisory committee on political refugees.

Mr. Roosevelt said that, at the end of the luncheon, he would read a message to the group, and that this would be made public.

The committee officers will be in session at the State Department Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning. Thirty-two nations have representation on the committee.

One of the questions to come up, it was said, will be participation by the various governments in the work of financing relocation of political refugees from Germany in remote parts of the world.

Before war broke out, Prime Minister Chamberlain of Great Britain indicated that his government would willingly help out in the work. The extent to which war has affected prospects for governmental participation will be discussed.

One of the functions of the foundation which Van Zeeland heads was to serve as a medium whereby a certain amount of the funds remaining in the possession of Jews in Germany would be used in the resettlement work. Fulfillment of this plan is virtually out of the question as a result of the war.

Projects for resettlement in the Philippines, the Dominican Republic and British Guiana were investigated some time ago on behalf of the committee, and favorable reports submitted. But the cost of relocating thousands of people in such areas is said to be enormous.

Van Zeeland Delayed

Another problem confronting the committee is the large number of Jewish refugees from Germany, estimated at 100,000 or more, who have found temporary haven in countries adjacent to Germany.

In a large degree, it is said, the officers will pick up where the conference in London in July left off.

Red Cross Appropriates Million For Relief of War Victims

The central committee of the American Red Cross has appropriated $1,000,000 to finance urgent relief needs in warring Europe, Norman H. Davis, Red Cross chairman, announced yesterday. The funds are to "help meet the most pressing needs for relief.

"If the needs among the war victims develop to such proportions that we require large funds," Davis said, "the American Red Cross will have to make a war drive. We are willing to do everything in relief that the American people want us to do."

Davis said reports he had received from the American Red Cross delegation specified needs for 87,000 Polish refugees in Latvia, Lithuania, Hungary and Rumania.

The immediate problem is to provide clothing for the Polish refugees and for the civilian population in France which has been removed from danger zones into rural areas.

57,660 Enrolled In Roll Call Drive

A city-wide appeal for Red Cross recruits was broadcast last night as roll call membership rose to 57,660, a little ahead of last year's campaign, but far short of the 125,000 goal sought by next Thursday.

"This year more than at any time the Red Cross is working double duty to lighten human needs and alleviate suffering," declared Edgar Morris, general chairman, speaking over WMAL. "The Red Cross belongs to everybody and everybody should belong to the Red Cross."

Lewis Warns A. F. L. as He Is Reelected

32-Minute Ovation Given C.I.O. Leader at San Francisco Session

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Oct. 13.—The C. I. O. ended its second convention today with a roaring approval of President John L. Lewis' final thrust at the A. F. L., which he warned to "beware" of the C. I. O.'s growing strength.

"We must not believe that because we have a great multitude of members that all is well or that our enemies are asleep just because they are silent for the day—and that goes for the A. F. L. as much as for the National Association of Manufacturers," Lewis said.

"As you grow in strength and grow numerically, you will find more and more people wanting to be friendly with you, and that goes for the A. F. L. as much as for any politician.

The convention's last action was unanimous approval of a resolution—the seventy-ninth in the four-day session—embodying the theme song of all Lewis' talks at the meeting and again pledging the C. I. O. to "organizing the unorganized millions of American workers on an industrial basis."

Says C. I. O. American

In his final plea to "organize the unorganized" Lewis said: "Let no man be afraid of the C. I. O. because it is an American institution. No policy that it has espoused originated or was conceived from within any group except a group of Americans. They are just as proud of their Americanism as any industrialist who ever received a corporate bonus."

The convention re-elected all of its international officers, added four more vice presidents and decided to pay its secretary.

It left selection of the next convention to its new executive board. The board meets tomorrow but will not select a convention site until June.

In one of the many resolutions adopted today the convention declared "it is the unshakable policy of the C. I. O. and its affiliated organizations to adhere to their contractual agreements in letter and spirit."

"Yesterday the American Federation of Labor listened for an hour to some individual . . . accusing your president of being ruthless," Lewis told the second convention. "He told the American Federation to beware."

Carey Renamed Secretary

Lewis paused, smiled and remarked, "I think they had better beware. The Congress of Industrial Organizations is the only instrumentality in the last half century that has proved itself capable of dealing with industry on equal terms.

"For the first time industry has been compelled to recognize the industrial, social and political rights of the workers. That work has been appreciated by millions of workers not yet in the ranks of organized labor."

James B. Carey, 28-year-old president of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, was re-elected secretary by acclamation. This time Carey steps into a paid job, breaking the C. I. O. precedent of paying none of its officers.

Hillman, Murray Re-elected

All of the international vice presidents are heads of their unions or organizing committees. Sidney Hillman, New York, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and Philip Murray, Pittsburgh, Steel Workers organizing committee, were re-elected.

New vice presidents are Emil Rieve, Philadelphia, Textile Workers Union; Roland J. Thomas, Detroit, United Automobile Workers; S. H. Dalrymple, Akron, Ohio, United Rubber Workers, and Reid Robinson, Denver, International Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers.

Joseph Curran, New York, president of the National Maritime Union, mentioned as a probable vice president, was not nominated.

A. F. L. Backs "Cash and Carry"

Cincinnati, Oct. 13 (AP).—The American Federation of Labor adjourned its fifty-ninth convention today, tacking on to its policy against war a demand that this Nation's course of neutrality require belligerent powers buying in United States markets to take title to goods here and carry them away in other than American ships.

The so-called "cash and carry" policy approved by the thinned ranks of delegates who remained for the closing session was brought to the convention floor in a supplemental report from the executive council.

The report renewed the federation's insistence that the United States remain neutral, keep its ships and citizens out of war zones and prohibit extension of credit to foreign powers which would "give this country a stake in the outcome of war."

Adopted without a word of debate, the council report said nothing about lifting the arms embargo from the neutrality act.

he declared, "constant control over such exports and transportation should be maintained by the Government through the licensing provisions of the munitions section so as to protect the safety of our seamen wherever necessary."

Chairman Bailey, of the Senate Commerce Committee, who had submitted a compromise shipping amendment to Pittman yesterday, said he saw "no serious conflict in principle" between Pittman's conditions and his own proposal, adding: "I think we can get together."

Bailey's plan in effect would give the President discretionary power to exempt from the ship restrictions American vessels trading with countries "only nominally at war." This would permit comparatively free American ship movement in the Pacific.

In accord with the principle of easing the bill's antiwar limitations on the merchant marine, where it can be done without risk, leaders in the movement disagreed on method.

A set of amendments filed with Pittman by Senator Johnson (Republican), of California, isolationist leader, proposed simply a statutory extension of American ship rights to trade with belligerent possessions in the Pacific.

Still a third proposal submitted to Pittman by Senator White (Republican), of Maine, is understood to call for complete elimination of the shipping ban section, and to rely instead on the President's proposed power to guard American shipping by regulating travel through war zones.

Pittman indicated he wished to hear from Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, who recently called the bill's restrictions on American shipping too stringent, before the Foreign Relations Committee chairman would call a meeting of Democratic members of the committee to consider changes. He asked all Senators having shipping changes in mind to "draft them" and turn them in for study.

The Nevadan, who sponsored the sharp restrictions as an antiwar safeguard, said, "I may bow as I have done many a time to superior wisdom of other Senators," but said he felt personally bound to stand on the four-point formula.

Garner Backs Compromise

Administration leaders were represented as anxious to reach an accord on the ship section, so this can be removed as an obstacle to action on the bill. Vice President Garner is understood to have thrown his influence behind a shipping compromise.

For the first time during the debate, Administration pressure was exerted to speed action, and isolationist opponents of the bill called another conference. They took general exception to proposals to limit remaining Senate speeches to one hour on the bill and one hour on each amendment, and some said privately they believed general debate should continue for at least another week.

Two Senators, both Republicans, yesterday took the floor in the Senate's ninth day of debate. Senator Taft, of Ohio, son of the former President, called the arms embargo "specious humanitarianism" and urged its repeal. Senator Nye, of North Dakota, making his second speech against repeal, "dared" the President to submit his embargo repeal proposal to 50 of the Nation's leading industrialists, and his Cabinet. Nye declared they would agree the repeal bill would result in a disastrous "war boom."

Says It Favors Aggressor

Taft argued, instead, that retaining the embargo "really makes war more likely throughout the world."

"It favors warlike nations which build up their armaments in time of peace, and it discriminates against those nations which, hoping for peace and relying on treaties, fail to pour vast sums in armament," said Taft. "In short, it favors the aggressor against the peaceful nation. It encourages war in other parts of the world; it does not discourage it."

Taft argued America "can be just as neutral without an arms embargo as with an arms embargo," and charged repeal opponents with "illogical" reasoning. He said the President should pay more attention to restoring sound fiscal policies at home, "and relieving private enterprise of some of the burdens which keep 10,000,000 unemployed," but declared he does not question "the good faith of the President in his present attitude on neutrality."

Taft proposed:

That Congress remain in session to take prompt legislative action in any emergency.

That the bill be amended to declare a "war zone" covering all waters within 300 miles of Europe, to restrict "dangerous" American ship traffic with European neutrals.

That a strict "cash" requirement be substituted for the bill's discretionary allowance of 90-day credit to belligerents.

Senator Nye repeated his demand that the arms embargo be retained "as a limitation on the war-trade and on a war-boom, as well as an evidence to the world that we are not going to take sides all over the face of this war."

Challenged By Norris

He was challenged in one dramatic scene by Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, who cast his Senate vote against American entry into the last war, but who favors repeal of the embargo.

"For Heaven's sake," Nye had just shouted, "don't take this first step. It is so easy to take others."

Norris rose, directly facing Nye, and waited for a pause.

"The argument is continually made," interrupted the white-haired Nebraskan, "that this first step is a first step, and it is going to lead to other steps. Saying this is a first step is making a charge that is without any foundation whatsoever."

Norris asked if America was expected "to 'lean backward and be un-neutral' in order to aid Hitler. He said he knew passage of the bill would not please Hitler, but asked, "Are we going to be so afraid that we will offend him that we are going to refuse to act?"

Nye said that if the Senate called 50 of the Nation's leading industrialists, he doubted it would find "10 among the 50 who will wish to repeat the experience of the last war-boom."

Then he "dared" the Senate to call all members of the President's Cabinet "and ask them to show how and why the industrialists are wrong in opposing the war boom allowed in this cash-and-carry plan, as it new stands."

"I do not believe you will accept this challenge, for you might find—you might possibly find that there would not be one member of the President's Cabinet who would say to you that such an unlimited war-boom would be a good thing for our economy, for our Nation's real good."

Former German Spy Chief Would Serve Britain

London, Oct. 3.—Capt. Franz von Rintelen, war-time chief of the German spy ring in the United States, appeared before the enemy alien tribunal in London today and was granted liberty of movement in England "subject to certain conditions."

Previous to his appearance befor the tribunal, Von Rintelen stated he had applied for a commission in the British army. He was, he said, "willing to go anywhere." He had lived in England for the past ten years and was reported last year to be seeking British naturalization.

Dog Mart Is Howling Success

knives to scalp the traders with in some less formal engagement later on—was successful in spots.

Ugliness Wins Prize

For example, Ray Hall had last year bought a dog for $2 on the mart. Today he put him up as the ugliest dog of 1939 and took the $5 prize. So, refraining from contact with the auctioneer, he keeps his dog, with $3 profit.

Fredericksburg took dogs, smells, sentiment, barking and commotion with a big civic seriousness today. The high school turned out classes for the afternoon, and its blue-uniformed band led a dog parade through the streets.

No sooner had the 500 dogs got second vocal wind than the officials set off a fox horn blowing contest and an old-fashioned fiddling bout. The dogs heard the horns and wanted to go hunting, and heard the fiddling and didn't know what to make of it, and the barking increased and the bedlam spread over the town.

This same bedlam last year caused the officials to decide on moving the mart to the high school grounds, four blocks distant from the town's business area. It used to be centered in the city park, where the merchants were exposed to nervous prostration while rushing about the extra business the mart was bringing as a blessing to the town.

Frock-tailed Auctioneer

The man who sold the dogs was J. L. Brown, of Culpeper, a glib-tongued auctioneer, dressed in a frock-tailed coat and a big silk hat.

From a breeder's point of view, the dog mart is a catch-as-catch-can affair. The American Kennel Club never heard of the Fredericksburg dog mart, but, as Mayor W. Marshall King said:

"The Fredericksburg dog mart never heard of the American Kennel Club."

There is a rumor that in 1936 a local railroad switchman heard the blasts from the fox horn blowers, mistook it for old No. 6, and flagged a freight train.

In 1937 rumor has it that one of the city's oldest residents, a veteran of the Civil War, stood up in his wheel chair when he heard the blasts, threw off the covering, cupped his gnarled hands and yelled: "Hannah, hand me my gun! Them Yanks are coming up the river by boat this time."

Back in 1935 the blowing was so pronounced that 15 workmen in a local factory put down their tools and knocked off for the day, thinking it was the quitting whistle.

For some reason the dogs at the mart always look the same. Officials swear they are not the same actors imported year after year.

"We just have a strong strain down here," explained one.

1,500 Applaud 'H.M.S. Pinafore' Hospital Benefit

An audience of 1,500, drawn partly by love of Gilbert and Sullivan and partly by a desire to benefit Children's Hospital, attended a performance of "H. M. S. Pinafore" at Constitution Hall last night. It was the second of two appearances of the New York Light Opera Company, under auspices of a local concert bureau.

The preceding night's presentation was "The Mikado."

Judging by the number of encores, the audience was satisfied with the entertainment, although failure of the presentation to attain distinction scarcely could be ascribed exclusively to the imperfect acoustical properties of the hall. The diction of the singers, the direction, and the acting ability of the performers invited criticism, but the familiar plot and its more familiar plot and its more familiar tunes gave their usual pleasure.

Dutch Approve Allies' Firmness

Copyright by New York Times.

Amsterdam, Oct. 13.—The firmness of French Premier Daladier and British Prime Minister Chamberlain was approved here. It generally is admitted that neither could speak otherwise, but it is held this makes the situation more tragic since it is not expected that Germany, unless defeated, is either prepared or able to part with Premier Hitler.

Official silence is being maintained in accordance with the nation's unwillingness to answer Hitler's suggestion of neutral mediation.

Unusual Calm At Westwall Puzzles French

Only Activities Come When 2 Nazi Patrols Are Beaten Back

By G. H. Archambault.
Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 13.—Berlin's "war in earnest" did not materialize today—at least not on the Rhine-Moselle front.

Not that it was really expected that rejection of the "peace offer" would be followed the very next day by a Mars attack. Yet it is something in the nature of an anticlimax to learn that last night, which was clear with its star-lit sky, was also generally quiet.

Today the weather turned bad again, so bad, indeed, that it was judged worthy of mention in the communique. The first lines were not totally inactive, nevertheless, since German patrols were beaten off in the Warndt sector during the night and in the Pirmasens sector during the day.

Now in Position

The situation can be reasoned out in a dozen plausible ways, but in the final analysis they all boil down to this: Either the Allies will attack or the Germans will attack; or neither will attack.

Some competent circles here consider that Fuehrer Hitler's talk of peace probably had several objectives, one of which was to gain time to enable troops from Poland to reach the Western Front. This they have done. The German armies are now in position and belief here continues to be that they will assume the offensive.

For the moment, however, all is conjecture. It is possible, of course, that this week's intense agitation on the part of the Germans was a feint intended to rivet attention on the Saar and the Lauter rivers while they prepared to act somewhere else. There is one interesting report that Hitler is about to establish his headquarters near the front.

Quiet on Entire Front

The French communiques follow:

"No. 79 (morning). A quiet night on the whole front. Enemey patrols were driven back in the Warndt regions.

"No. 80 (evening). Misty, rainy weather. Little activity on the front. In region south of Pirmasens the enemy sent out several patrols and scouting parties, which were compelled to withdraw without results."

According to a semiofficial commentary on the operations, the presence of several new German army corps has been noted among the immediate defenders of the Westwall. It is understood that the First Army Corps, consisting of crack troops, is there.

It is also reported that German patrols, as they regain their own lines, set "booby" traps in No Man's Land. Canteens or cartridge pouches are seemingly dropped accidentally to conceal explosive charges.

French Fliers Held As Good as Ever

One French plane, which had been taking photographs over the Siegfried Line, returned within the French lines with its pilot dead and its observer-photographer, shot with ten bullets, dying. When the pilot was hit in the head the observer, although wounded in the leg, climbed into the pilot seat, dislodged the dead man, and held to his course. He was followed by two German planes, which continued firing. With blood flowing from wounds in nearly every part of his body, he brought the plane and cargo of valuable photographs safely into the French lines.

Saves Films in Flames

Another pilot, whose observer had been killed, landed his plane in flames, and although himself wounded, dashed through the flames and saved his companions and films.

One of the commanders of these men described their almost daily exploits as beyond the limits of imagination for daring and skill. They are not always successful, but their courage and skill have already proved them fully equal to the last generation of French air fighters.

French Reds Deny Foreign Employ

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 13.—Five former Communist deputies, questioned by a military magistrate this afternoon, refused to back down from the position taken by their leaders in a letter demanding acceptance of Adolf Hitler's peace.

They indignantly denied the charge they were in the employ of, or under the influence of any foreign government.

Leader of Finland's Forces

speech was presented to the German people through the press tonight as a straight-forward recognition of Britain's intention to prosecute the war against Germany.

Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung said:

"Even before it was known in America, Russia, Japan and Italy that Germany had shown up Chamberlain, public opinion in these countries on its own accord was unanimous that England had rejected the Fuehrer's peace proposal.

"This impression was especially noteworthy in Washington where the British war declaration on Germany was understood without any illusions."

The newspaper added: "The opinion was unanimous in the large neutral countries of the doubled and tripled direct danger to England and her empire."

The press in general told German readers that Chamberlain's speech was "a big disappointment everywhere."

The official statement released to the press was bitter.

It asserted Chamberlain's speech was "an unheard of insult to Germany," and that "he did not represent the cause of the people but the cause of a small clique which sees its task in war."

"After this speech by the English Prime Minister," it said, "there can no longer exist any doubt among the German people that no matter what we do, what we say, what we offer, Chamberlain and the war inciters of Great Britain are determined—at the same time that they utter hypocritical phrases—to annihilate the German people."

The Voelkischer Geobachter arranged to publish tomorrow a three-column, page one, attack on "How the British Empire Was Created: Robbers and Pirates Preach Morality."

France, Britain Blamed

"England's history is a chain of acts of force and broken words," according to the article.

Consultation with Moscow over the situation created by Chamberlain's rejection of Hitler's peace offer is based on the September 28 agreement.

This said that should the efforts of the German and Russian governments fail to bring peace, "The fact would thereby be established that England and France will be responsible for continuation of the war, in which case the governments of Germany and the U. S. S. R. will consult each other as to necessary measures."

As for Italy, Dienst Aus Deutschland, informed news commentary, said "undoubtedly the last German-Italian conference in Berlin took into consideration the possibility of an unfavorable development."

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Berlin, Oct. 13.—Prime Minister Chamberlain's speech itself was barely quoted in German newspapers today. The official communique printed in the Deutsche Boebachter, which was the longest account available in Germany, published exactly five sentences of the British premier's words.

Other passages of the speech were referred to only indirectly by violent denunciations. It was the first time since the war began that more than three paragraphs of any important speech by an English or French statesman had been published in any German newspaper.

Russian Talks With Finland Are Postponed

Soviet-Turk Pact on Black Sea Control Reported Imminent

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Oct. 13.—A Russian-Turkish agreement on control of the Black Sea and the Dardanelles are reported tonight as the Kremlin postponed indefinitely further talks with Finland in order to confer with Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu.

Lacking official comment, observers believed Russia and Turkey also would define their mutual attitudes in the European war in a pact within a day or two.

Finland's emissary, Dr. Juho Kusti Paasikivi, had a brief meeting yesterday with Josef Stalin and Soviet Premier-Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff, and had expected to see them again today. Instead, he visited the Soviet agricultural exhibition.

Finland, summoned to confer with Russia, and presumably to be drawn into the widening Soviet Baltic Sea orbit, was placed in a better bargaining position by diplomatic representations to Moscow by the United States, Sweden, Denmark and Norway.

Dr. Paasikivi was believed to be waiting for further instructions from Helsinki before continuing the discusions with Russia.

Scandinavians in Moscow declined to discuss rumors that Sweden, Norway and Denmark had been invited to send delegates to the Russo-Finnish negotiations.

the first suffered by British shipping at the hands of submarines since the sinking of the little 876-ton Glen Farg, October 4, nearly ten days ago. The Heronspool, registered at West Hartlepool, was owned by a pool shipping company and engaged in tramping, its agents said, declining to discuss the destination or the cargo on the last voyage. All that was known here about the rescue of her crew was that they had been picked up by the President Harding.

It was one of those ironic quirks in this unpredictable war that, with all Britain watching the skies and the Western Front of France for Adolf Hitler's reply to Neville Chamberlain's blunt rejection of the Nazi peace terms, the most striking news came from the sea with the British navy apparently pressing the fight.

Simultaneously with announcement of the destruction of three German submarines in one day, it was announced that three Polish destroyers which escaped from the Baltic before the outbreak of the war and came to Great Britain were proving effective fighters against submarines in and near the English Channel. They are the destroyers Grom or "Thunder"; the Blyskawica or "Lightning," and the Burza or "Storm." These ships, recently inspected by Admiral Sir Martin Dunbar-Nasmyth, under whose command they were, have been given praise for efficient cooperation with the British fleet.

Regarding another incident in the war at sea the day brought additional information about the capture of the Hamburg American liner Cap Norte.

The German liner, it was disclosed, had been repainted so that her usual yellow black funnel was completely yellow. For her own name she had substituted the name Ancona and was flying a Swedish flag which was painted also on her hull.

No manifest or bills of lading were available for the voyage of the Cap Norte from Brazil, but it was disclosed here that her 5,641 ton cargo included wheat, wool, skins, casings, rock crystals, bran, hair, tallow, wax, clothing, tobacco, cocoa and honey. In a refrigerating chamber, it was said, were 440 casks of horseflesh, three boxes of caviar, and 500 boxes of lemons.

make our flesh creep," and that Hitler's peace offensive had by no means ended.

On the other hand, the spokesman said, if the Nazis are not bluffing this time "we will see to it that Hitler gets as good if not better than he gives us."

Chamberlain Weighs Broadcast

Meanwhile, Chamberlain debated whether he should broadcast to the world tomorrow night or Sunday an amplification of his statement in Parliament. Reports in the late editions of some London morning newspapers that the prime minister had decided to "follow up" with a radio address to the United States during the week-end met with the official comment that "no decision has yet been reached."

Chamberlain was considered to have made Britain's position so clear in the Commons yesterday that "at present" a broadcast appears to be "unnecessary and redundant."

The only discordant notes in the pipe-organ volume of approval that was sounded today for Chamberlain came from two sources, David Lloyd George and the British Communist Party.

Lloyd George summoned the Council of Action for Peace and Reconstruction, of which he is chairman, into session behind locked doors at Caxton Hall this morning.

The 76-year-old "Welsh Wizard" lectured the delegates for 40 minutes. Then they passed with only two dissenting votes—although there were several abstainers—a resolution which declared that the council, "while welcoming the fact that the prime minister's statement does not finally close the door to negotiations, regard his statement as quite inadequate alike as a statement of Britain's war aims and as failing to contain any reference to the far-reaching consequences of the intervention of the U. S. S. R."

"Ready for Anything"

London, Oct. 13.—The war office announced today that with establishment of the British expeditionary force in France, "we are ready for anything."

The admiralty went on record as taking exception to the American nations' right to draw a line around the Americas within which belligerent action would be forbidden. Whether this would be respected remained for the belligerents to decide, the admiralty said.

Britain Claims "First Round"

Britain claimed the "first round of the war" against Germany with the successful transportation of the British expeditionary force of 158,000 men to France, and declared "we await attack in complete confidence."

The declaration came from a towering, wise-cracking staff general whom the war office produced as a spokesman. He was introduced at a crowded press conference by Secretary for War Hore-Belisha. The officer remained anonymous outside the conference.

Hore-Belisha keynoted the gathering by asserting the successful mass movement of British troops to France was lauded by a Frenchman as "the greatest military feat since Trafalgar and the first victory we have had in the war."

Belligerents to Decide

The admiralty took notice of the Pan-American neutrality zone around the Americas by asserting that it must be for belligerents "to decide whether or not to accept restrictions which would limit their enjoyment of certain well-established rights."

Reports of the action regarding the neutral zone taken at the Panama Conference of 21 American Republics were said by an admiralty spokesman to be "unofficial."

Six Changes Approved by Zoning Board

The Board of Zoning Adjustment yesterday denied the appeals of three applicants, approved six and deferred action on several others.

The appeals for gasoline stations on Wisconsin ave, near W place northwest, and at 1136 New Jersey avenue northwest were denied. The petition for the Wisconsin avenue site had been made by Leon Robbin and the one on New Jersey avenue by David S. Moore.

Applications approved follow:

Appeal of George Borger for permission to change a nonconforming use from a dry cleaning agency to a grocery store at 1901 Twelfth street northwest. The owner, however, was requested not to erect signs on the T street side of the buildins.

Appeal of O. C. McCardell, for permission to use the rear of 423 Third street northeast for the specific use as a warehouse for the storage of tires.

Appeal of George David, for permission to change a nonconforming use from a grocery store and barber shop to a cleaning, pressing, shoe repairing and laundry agency and tailor shop at 201 Eighth street southeast. The entrance must be on the B street side, however.

Appeal of C. S. Tenley, for permission to change a nonconforming use from a coffee shop to a combination hat shop and book-lending library at 1514 Thirty-first street northwest. No additional signs will be permitted and a ban on neon signs on the inside of the store was ordered.

A. Ward, for permission to use the rear of 1231 Tenth street northwest for the specific purpose of manufacturing and repairing neon signs.

David Brown, 719 Rittenhouse street northwest, was given permission to erect a garage in the rear of the dwelling but denied permission to construct a front porch.

The appeal of Isabel and Irene Johnson, for permission to establish an automobile parking lot at 927 Maryland avenue southwest was denied.

Conscription Scare Used in Quebec Politics

Copyright by New York Times.

Ottawa, Ontario, Oct. 13.—The Canadian defense department today denounced the activities of bogus recruiting officers who have been giving French Canada the impression that conscription was imminent.

The department's denunciation follows a statement by the Federal Justice Minister Ernest La Pointe that men disguised as Royal Canadian mounted police had been visiting Quebec homes as though getting ready to enforce conscription. This, said La Pointe, was a sample of the gangster methods being employed to secure a victory for Premier Maurice Duplessis in the general election which was called on the twenty-fifth in protest against the federal government's war measures.

Sweden, with her gold reserves, might grant large loans to her neighbors to help defray expenses of the crisis.

Peace Move Discounted

Most sources discounted the likelihood of any common effort to urge the warring nations to negotiate peace, although one Swedish paper has suggested Gustaf could qualify as a disinterested intermediary.

Dr. Halvdan Koht, Norway's foreign minister, in a statement at Oslo said the meeting was called "both because of the general European situation and the special situation in connection with Finland. The meeting will express Scandinavia's feeling of unity."

A Finnish delegation is now in Moscow for conversations at the Kremlin with Soviet leaders.

Because King Gustaf already had been suggested in some quarters as a possible mediator of European peace, there has been some speculation over the likelihood of a general peace move by the northern countries.

It was recalled, however, that a meeting of the three northern kings in December, 1914, developed on such move, the conference being confined to a discussion of Scandinavian problems arising out of war.

The situation today, however, is far different than in 1914. Finland then belonged to the Russian Empire, although with the status of an autonomous grand duchy. In postwar years, after Finland won her independence, she has drawn closer to her Scandinavian neighbors. She was regarded as one of the "northern countries" (Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland and Finland), bound together by a common destiny and common ideals.

Sweden Still Optimistic

This was emphasized for all the world to see when Denmark, Norway and Sweden yesterday made representations at Moscow in behalf of Finland and comments in the Scandinavian press stressed brotherly feeling and common anxiety.

Finn Cabinet Increased

Helsinki, Oct. 13 (AP).—Finland greeted with enthusiasm today the news Sweden had called a conference of northern European states as President Kyoesti Kallio broadened the make-up of his cabinet, working for preservation of Finnish neutrality and independence.

The President by decree also ordered Finnish civilians to hold themselves in readiness for nonmilitary pursuits if required by the present emergency. Regulations previously drawn providing for wartime emergencies were put into effect by the decree. All citizens may be required to work directly or indirectly for the national defense.

laid upon their shoulders. They did not complain of the rough channel crossing and marched smartly down the gangplanks to the French docks in their new battle uniforms with long trousers buckled at the ankles.

The army England is sending to France is well trained and excellent physically and in morale.

The English army which took the brunt of the German onslaught in 1914 convinced Britain she might again be called upon to make the supreme effort. Everything has been done to prepare for this eventuality.

England now has an army incomparably better trained than that of 1914, whereas many competent observers believe Reichsfuehrer Hitler's army is inferior to the imperial troops of the World War. The inferiority of today's German soldiers as compared with the Reich's troops of 1914 is attributed to the seething unrest in Germany under Nazism, the "shakiness" of the home front, which has quickened since the boundaries of the Reich were extended to include Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, and by the uncertainty underlying Russia's plans.

French People Confident

England's hastily mobilized and hurriedly trained army of 1914 was able to hold the Germans and finally drive them out of France and Belgium. Therefore, British leaders are convinced the present carefully selected, well trained British army could not only stem any German attack, but could quickly hurl it back in a rout which would carry the Union Jack deep into German territory.

In my survey of the British sector of the front I rode past many small cities and villages which had been destroyed in the World War, only to rise, phoenix-like, from the ashes, and which now are threatened with a second destruction.

The inhabitants of these towns have been so impressed with the pouring in of the British mechanized army, and with the evident morale and efficiency of the English troops, that they do not believe there is the slightest chance of homes being again demolished regardless of the ferocity of the expected German attack.

Functions Like Machine

The English soldiers and French civilians are fraternizing in a hearty manner. One French civilian told me he had full confidence that the British would save France by turning any German drive into a quick retreat which will move the war far back into the country which started it.

I am not permitted, for military reasons, to name the place where British headquarters have been established. The Nazis showed in their invasion of Poland that such headquarters are among their chief military objectives.

But I can say, after inspecting the country for many miles around these headquarters, that the whole British military machine is functioning so far with perfect efficiency.

And to one who has seen much of war, this indicates it will function smoothly, too, in action.

British Text, Rejecting U. S. Neutrality Zone

Move Tried Before And Was Impractical, Admiralty Declares

By the Associated Press

London, Oct. 13.—Following is the British admiralty statement on the establishment of a neutral zone at sea by the United States and Latin-American countries:

Several unofficial reports have been received recently of the important decisions reached at the Panama conference of the republics of America. These reports are to the effect that a neutral or safety zone of variously stated depth from the coast is to be established.

It is understood that the zone is in no way intended as an extension of territorial waters, but belligerents are to be invited to accept the limitation of their operations which would be involved by the scheme. This is clearly the wisest way of proceeding, since while belligerents, and particularly the Allies, may be anxious to assist all neutral countries in keeping war from the proximity of their coasts, it must be for them to decide whether or not to accept restrictions which would limit their enjoyment of certain well-established rights.

Many Extravagant Claims

Neutral states are entitled and bound to demand that belligerents shall abstain from hostilities in their territorial waters, and it is not a hostile act if a neutral repels even by force an attack upon his neutrality. During the Great War Norway, Sweden, Spain and Holland forbade belligerent submarines to enter their territorial waters except in case of distress.

In olden times many extravagant claims were put forward by the various nations as to the limit of their territorial waters, but since those days such claims have been drastically modified and it is now generally recognized that no country can properly claim jurisdiction over large areas of ocean nor the right to control or exclude the movements of foreign ships on the high seas. This applies equally to belligerent operations, though a belligerent can of course restrict his operations of his own free will if he so wishes.

Uphold 3-Mile Principle

Since the great war the importance of the limit of territorial waters has been brought to the notice of the public in several ways among others by reason of the national prohibition act of America. Resulting from discussions with Great Britain an agreement was reached in Washington in 1924 whereby the United States was given a right to board and examine any British vessel suspected of being engaged in liquor smuggling at a distance from the coast that could be traversed by that vessel in one hour.

By the same agreement Great Britain and America declared that it was their firm intention to uphold the principle that three marine miles extending from the coastline outwards and measured from low-water mark should constitute the proper limits of territorial waters. Similar agreements were subsequently entered into by America with Germany and Sweden.

Certain bays, straits and canals have from time to time been the subject of special international agreement so that when questions of jurisdiction and sovereignty arise careful reference must be made to any agreements applicable to the particular case. The width of the general belt or territorial waters is now widely accepted as being three miles. Great Britain in common with many other countries has long refused to recognize claims to a territorial belt of great width.

Pour La France! Woman Gives Her Mite for Defense

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Oct. 13.—In Premier Daladier's mail box at the war ministry this morning was a letter accompanied by small package, in which was enclosed a wedding ring and a little gold cross. The letter, which was unsigned, read:

"Monsieur Daladier, permit me to give my wedding ring, which is my whole fortune, for the national defense. My daughter, whose fiance is with the army, is joining me in giving the gold cross."

"With my profound respect, (signed) a true Frenchwoman."

The premier immediately handed over this touching gift to the Association des Oeuvres Dans L'Armee, which he founded last February and through which are canalized all gifts and monies received for the relief of families of soldiers who are in distress.

British See Italy Leading Friendly Bloc

Balkans Expected to Become Increasingly Benevolent to Allies

By Wallace Carroll,
United Press Staff Writer.

London, Oct. 13.—British quarters reported tonight that important diplomatic moves are underway indicating that Italy is breaking away from the Rome-Berlin axis and is drifting toward benevolent neutrality toward the Allies.

The diplomatic moves, which British observers interpreted as perhaps heralding the "neutralization" of Italy despite her military alliance with Germany, made up a complicated chain of negotiations in and concerning the Balkan states.

These negotiations, it was said, look toward creation of a new Balkan peace bloc with Italy as its virtual protector.

Move Ripens in London

The new Balkan bloc was expected to remain neutral, of course, but diplomats in London believed that once established it probably would become increasingly friendly toward the Allies.

The move to create the new peace bloc was reported to have ripened at a dinner at a Balkan legation in London last week, attended by the Turkish Ambassador and the Ministers of Jugoslavia, Rumania, Bulgaria and Greece. Since then the project has been gaining impetus daily.

The starting point of the project, which might have a vital bearing on outcome of the war, was described in British quarters as a proposal for transformation of the 1934 Balkan entente into a Balkan alliance aimed at any foreign power which might attack any Balkan country.

Hungary Might Join

Bulgaria, it was said, probably will join the new bloc and Hungary also may adhere to it.

If Italy were to assume the role of guardian of the new alignment, Italian influence in Budapest might assure Hungarian adherence and thereby weaken German influence in that direction.

Developments of recent days were reported by British informants to have been greatly facilitated by a series of events in the Balkans, promising to replace Balkan rivalries with collaboration.

Italy recently has given significant evidence of her changing policy by withdrawing a considerable number of troops from Albania, where they had aroused serious fears on the part of Greece and Yugoslavia.

Pole Gets Divorce; Wife Wouldn't Immigrate Here

A World War veteran yesterday won a divorce after his wife, a resident of Russian-occupied Poland, contested the suit by mail in a partially translated hearing before Justice Bailey in District Court.

The divorce was awarded to Stanislaw Mancewicz, of 3526 Eleventh street northwest. The testimony of Mrs. Emilja Mancewicz, of Grodno, Poland, was certified by Polish authorities in Grodno, since taken over by Russia, and given full recognition.

In granting the divorce, Justice Bailey stipulated that Mrs. Mancewicz continue to get $17.82 monthly as her share of Mancewicz's pension. Mancewicz came to the United States 25 years ago and fought in the American Army. He testified his wife refused to come to this country.

Heifetz a Treat In First Film At the Capitol

Music-Drama Has Many Novel Qualities; Gordon Band Scores

"THEY SHALL HAVE MUSIC." Samuel Goldwyn-United Artists picturization of a screen-play by Irmgard Von Cube and John Howard Lawson, with Jascha Heifetz, Andrea Leeds, Joel McCrea, Gene Reynolds, Walter Brennan, Porter Hall, Terry Kilburn, Walter Tetley, Tommy Kelly, Chuck Stubbs, Jacqueline Nash, Alfred Newman, Mary Ruth, John St. Polis, Alexander Schoenberg, Marjorie Main, Arthur Hohl, Paul Harvey, "Zero" and the Peter Meremblum California Junior Symphony. Directed by Archie Mayo. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Capitol Theater.

"They Shall Have Music" is a richly satisfying picture. The Capitol's new film has exceptional music, quiet humor and a dash of satire, and while its screen play may stand far lower than the angels, its real fascination lies in five fingers of a man's left hand.

For Jascha Heifetz and his violin are the central attraction of the film and the all-seeing camera reveals more than could be seen in a hundred trips to the concert hall. The cool care with which the artist draws his bow, the lightning flashes of his fingers on the strings combine with a charming naturalness to make an earnest and loveable entertainment.

The story reveals the inspiration which success holds up to hope. A 13-year-old lad is growing up in the city slums and bad company. A natural love for music is rewakened quite by chance and his unhappy former life battles with an opening career, a battle that climaxes with an appeal to the great Heifetz (playing himself) to save an impoverished music school from its creditors. There was something of a similar note, you may recall, in the Deanna Durbin-Leopold Stokowski "One Hundred Men and a Girl."

Has Subtle Touches

But what the story lacks in originality or plausibility it makes up for in subtle bites at the deplorable conditions in which we allow our slums and less fortunate fellows to remain. There is the selfish pompousness of a music store proprietor, the bewildered futility of the forces of law and the unnecessary degradation in which so much of young America must grow up. It is hardly likely that, subtly as the point is etched, an audience can fail to feel this.

There is, as we have said, much superb music from Mr. Heifetz's violin. He plays several works, among them the Saint-Saens "Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso" and Chaikovski's "Melodie." A remarkable children's symphony, a far cry from the "Toy Symphony" of Haydn, plays Rossini's "Barber of Seville" overture with joyous elan. These youngsters are members of the Peter Meremblum California Junior Symphony Orchestra and are said closely to parallel those underprivileged children of the film who receive their musical education at no expense from an understanding teacher.

For general hilarity there are the roughneck antics of the alley kids, among them the cockney-speaking Terry Kilburn. For romance the film offers Andrea Leeds and Joel McCrea and for a real laugh the spectacle of mothers from the Emerald Isle keeping the sheriff from the door. Walter Brennan as the professor is, as usual, fine.

Youngsters Score

Two particularly fine lads are Gene Reynolds, making the earnest youngster a fellow you would like to meet again, and Jacqueline Nash, whose nine-year-old soprano is both promising and engaging to listen to.

Perhaps it is the contrast, but the Capitol's stage proceedings seem mediocre and listless this week. The main attraction is Gray Gordon's Orchestra, known for its "Tic Toc Rhythm."

The orchestra—a non-swing one—plays many of the numbers which it has popularized on records, of which "South of the Border" and "Darktown Strutters' Ball" were most favorably received. Their version of "Alexander's Ragtime Band" is an amusing one and their blonde soloist adept at putting it over. Dancer Jean Blanche, the toss-me-and-I'll-toss-you Lane Brothers and Bob Bromley are other entertainers and the proceedings close with the contrasting "Blue Danube" and "Tiger Rag."

RICHARD L. COE.

Metropolitan

What is probably the greatest picture inspired by the first World War, "All Quiet on the Western Front," drew large and attentive audiences at the Metropolitan Theater yesterday.

The stunning impact of "All Quiet" on warmakers, warmongers, jingoists and the crackpot variety of "patriotism" is as devastating as a well placed depth bomb on a submarine. It coldly shows war as war is—a compound of drudgery, savagery, boredom and suffering—reasonless, but apparently as unavoidable as an earthquake for the ordinary men who do most of the fighting and dying. As one of the recruits says wonderingly, "No one wanted a war, but here we are fighting."

Unapproachable in its depiction of the inception of the war spirit and of the realities of front fighting is "All Quiet." You see schoolboys vaccinated with militarism by a self-deceiving schoolmaster, marching off as to a picnic. Then comes reality. Star shells hover like evil moons, giving the range to enemy gunners. The French charge is tangled in the barbwire. A bullet-blinded German lad staggers right into No Man's Land. There's a hellish melee in the trenches, with close work with bayonet, boot and gun butt. There's the eerie battling in the cemetery with a German boy suddenly finding that his shell hole refuge holds an occupant who was coffined long ago. Worst of all is that other shell hole episode where a German soldier spends days with the French soldier he's fatally wounded, and is driven to near-madness by the dying man's moans.

All of the acting is practically flawless. Lew Ayres, now arriving in the limelight for the second time, plays the lead. The late Louis Wolheim, of "Capt. Flagg" fame, is a tough old German sergeant. You'll also see Scott Kolk, of Washington, in a prominent role.

There'll be divergence of opinion as to the value of the added commentary to "All Quiet." To this critic it seemed to detract, rather than to add strength to the picture's lesson, also to break the pace unhappily. The effect was that of picking up a written masterpiece needlessly underscored by a previous reader. "All Quiet" speaks its own great lesson so unmistakably that it needs no underscoring.

Bromfield Novel Is Picturized With Able Stars and Support; Benchley Tops Shorts

"THE RAINS CAME." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of the novel by Louis Bromfield, adapted to the screen by Philip Dunne and Julien Josephson, co-starring Myrna Loy, George Brent and Tyrone Power, with Brenda Joyce, Nigel Bruce, Maria Ouspenskaya, Joseph Schildkraut, Mary Nash, Jane Darwell, Marjorie Rambeau, Henry Travers, H. B. Warner, Laura Hope Crews, Harry Hayden, Herbert Evans, Abner Biberman, Mara Alexander and William Edmunds. Directed by Clarence Brown. Previewed Wednesday, October 11. At Loew's Palace Theater.

Primarily, "The Rains Came," as it is presented on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater this week, is a study in the regenerating influence of crisis upon character; secondarily, it is a sensational panorama of earthquake, fire, flood and plague. In combination these divergent elements of exciting, romantic and melodramatic entertainment comprise a camera drama of sufficient breadth to encompass every normal taste and compound a narrative of more than ordinary strength against a background of spectacular variety.

BELL

The action is laid in Ranchipur, India, where the Maharajah and Maharani rule in characteristic opulence over a contented people. They are surrounded by American missionaries, British aristocracy—if wealth makes aristocracy—and the great mass of their subjects. It is soon defined that the principal characters in the picturization of the Bromfield novel are to be the young remittance man, who is ostensibly a painter, but more immediately a partisan of the brandy bottle; the young daughter of American "hero worshipers," the chilled-steel Lady Edwina Esketh, with an acute acquisitiveness and an incarnadined past; Major Rama Safti, a young native surgeon, who has dedicated his life to his countrymen, and the Rev. Homer Smiley and his kindly wife.

Calamity Brings Out Character

Their early associations are marked by a tawdry sort of romanticism and an apparently deadly ressurection of a remote and unsavory past. The youthful Fern Simon sets her cap for the dissolute Tom Ransome, as an escape from an inhibited life; Lady Esketh seems again intrigued by the questionable fascinations of the same young wastrel—until she meets Maj. Safti—and the Maharajah and Maharani wonder what can be done about it all. This problem is speedily solved by torrential rain, floods, earthquake, fire and pestilence. With Ranchipur reduced to a shambles, the Maharajah and Lord Esketh among the victims of the disaster, and the need for valiant service desperate, a complete metamorphosis is worked—not miraculously, but logically—in the lives of the characters of chief interest and importance.

Lady Esketh, by an orderly application of retributive justice, becomes a scullery woman and apprentice nurse in the cholera hospital, where she dies a victim of the plague; Fern proves to be of heroic fiber, Ransome becomes a tower of strength to the iron Maharani and Rama renounces his infatuation with the predatory Lady Edwina and succeeds the Maharajah as the head of the state.

Such is the bare outline of the portions of Louis Bromfield's novel that have been made the basis of the expertly contrived screen play devised by Philip Dunne and Julien Josephson. It is embellished with many subtle and effective touches and soon overcomes the threat of cheapness suggested by its early passages.

The cataclysmic episodes that reveal each character in its true worth have been managed with exceptional skill and overpowering realism. The flood, earthquake and fire sequences have been executed with terrifying actuality and disclose again the cinema's unbelievable capacity for achieving miracles.

Handpicked Cast Excells

More than one of Hollywood's major studios is represented in the cast. Myrna Loy, borrowed from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for the role of Lady Esketh, plays with frigid ruthlessness and dies beautifully and repentantly in as able a scene as she ever has maneuvered before the cameras. George Brent, of the Warner Brothers' forces, also is at his vigorous best as Ransome, and Tyrone Power, on his home lot, does ample justice to one of the most impressive roles he has had. Brenda Joyce, the "freshman" of the cast, demonstrates the possession of clear-cut and splendid abilities in the role of Fern, leaping by this performance into the forefront of Hollywood's rising young actresses. Mme. Ouspenskaya and H. B. Warner, with the accent on the former, give credibility to the parts of the Indian rulers, and Nigel Bruce to a crotchety and overbearing Lord Esketh; Mary Nash, Marjorie Rambeau, Jane Darwell, Henry Travers, Joseph Schildkraut, Laura Hope Crews and others in the cast lend evenly balanced and uniformly capable support.

Robert Benchley's "The Day of Rest," one of his better short-reelers, towers over the cartoon comedy, "The Orphan Duck," and the new issue of the "News of the Day" among the supplementary subjects that augment a feature plucked from the upper brackets.

StarsDeem Making Up Lions Top Feat

Franchot Tone and Ann Sothern have nominated their make-up man, Web Ostrander, for the title of "Bravest Make-Up Man in Hollywood."

"We are basing our campaign platform," said Tone, "on the fact that he is the only make-up man with courage enough to put make-up on lions."

Ostrander made up three lions for "Fast and Furious."

introduced to American screen audiences in the "Goldwyn Follies and to the stage in "I Married an Angel," who this week is to be seen as the dancing star of the Warner Brothers' screen version of the musical comedy hit, "On Your Toes," the current attraction at the Earle Theater. Eddie Albert, "Brother Rat," appears in the costellar role of the "hoofer," played on the stage by Ray Bolger

Musical Satire Abounds in Spirit And Movement; 'Sidewalk Cafe' Revue

"ON YOUR TOES." Warner Brothers picturization of the Richard Rodgers-Lorenz Hart-George Abbott stage hit, adapted to the screen by Jerry Wald and Richard Macaulay, starring Vera Zorina, with Eddie Albert, Alan Hale, Frank McHugh, James Gleason, Lionid Kinkisey, Gloria Dickson, Queenie Smith, Erik Rhodes, Berton Churchill, Donald O'Connor and Sarita Wooten. Directed by Ray Enright. Reviewed Friday morning. At the Earle Theater.

Retaining its original purpose of bitingly satirizing the classic school of ballet dancing, "On Your Toes," as translated into celluloid by the Warner Brothers and now on view as chief screen feature for the week at the Earle Theater, multiplies the action of the stage hit until it becomes almost frenzy. There are many clever, and some subtle, lines in the dialogue that lose their effect—if they are not lost entirely—in the swiftness of the movement in which they are spoken. A slower tempo would have been an asset instead of the liability it probably was supposed to be.

The story of the gelatin gaucherie is that of childhood friends on the vaudeville circuits, who meet again in later years when the girl has become a star of Sergei Alexandrovitch's Russian Ballet and the boy a free-lance with a yen to compose music after breaking up the act of his parents by leaving it flat. With the encouragement of Ivan Boultonoff, an impecunious four-flusher, five years behind in his composition of a ballet for his crackpot boss—as big a faker as himself—Phil Dolan, jr., the "hoofer" dashes off the desired work at a single sitting. It is appropriated, majors, minors and naturals, by Boultonoff and Master Dolan is tossed out on his figurative ear—until Vera finds out. It then becomes a battle of conservatism against modernism, with the sideline aid of a rich young woman, who backs Alexandrovitch and sides with everyone else.

Climaxes in Dance

The climax of the picture is reached with the final public performance of Dolan's "Slaughter on Tenth Avenue," which duplicates in spirit, but varies in form, what was the big comedy-dancing scene on the stage. As I say, it is all very hurried, very tumultuous and very overpaced.

Zorina and Eddie Albert, as Vera and Phil, carry the romantic story and Zorina carries practically all of the dancing. Her ballets are expertly contrived interludes of choreographic grace and expressiveness that reflect the true gift of the artiste. Eddie Albert has been compelled to sacrifice something of his deliberate drollery, but still is a close second to Stuart Erwin in the art of retarded timing. Zorina, incidentally, is constantly growing in stature as an actress. Her reading of her lines here is even more effective than was true in "I Married an Angel," the stage piece that made her the toast of New York.

Alan Hale, as Alexandrovitch, gives further evidence of his versatility by revealing an unerring sense of the comic, and Leonid Kinskey is a constant reminder of Mischa Auer, as the bogus composer. Gloria Dickson, Queenie Smith, James Gleason, Berton Churchill, Frank McHugh, as a flibbertygibbet stage manager; Erik Rhodes, the overstuffed male star of the ballet troupe, and a stage full of ballerinas lend whole-hearted aid to the overkeying of the plot's skilfully burlesqued developments.

"Monroe Doctrine" Important

Harry Anger's "Sidewalk Cafe" revue is a nice complement to the screen feature. It is opened by Eileen and the Roxyettes in a cocktail shaker number, quickly followed by Betty Bruce in a brief interlude of the best tap dancing any feminine star has recently brought to the local stage. Edward Boecker, the "find of the month," discloses a splendid barytone voice in the "Rangers" song from "Rio Rita." " Ol' Man River" and "Over the Rainbow," from "The Wizard of Oz." George Prentice contributes a comic hit with the fastest "Punch and Judy" show now before the public, and Lorraine and Rognan, the topliners, repeat their familiar grotesqueries in song, dance and pantomime that also ranks with the best in its field. The Roxyettes, of course, are in and out throughout the goings-on.

Almost as important as the feature is the Warners' Technicolor short subject, dedicated to "The Monroe Doctrine." Here is enunciated the true purpose of an American policy that takes on new significance at just this time. It is peopled by many of the most important figures in American history and is as inspiring as it is interesting. It is the quick equivalent of months of reading and should be seen by every citizen of the United States for his own and his country's good.

The Paramount News completes a program against which it would be difficult to lodge a complaint of dullness.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Oct. 13.

EARL BROWDER: City Councilman Michael Quill, who was purged from the American Labor Party this week for refusing to denounce the Nazi-Soviet pact, will be subpenaed by the Dies Committee to testify regarding Communist influence . . . Mayor LaGuardia: That joint committee appointed by your board of higher education and the C. C. N. Y. faculty to seek a new president for the college probably will recommend Dr. Nelson P. Mead, the acting president . . . County Judge Martin: A number of Brooklyn lawyers have received subpenas plus railroad fare to appear at your removal proceedings in Albany to testify about that testimonial dinner to you.

DRAMA CRITICS CIRCLE: For the last two seasons you have awarded your prize for the best foreign play of the year to Paul Vincent Carroll, author of "Shadow & Substance" and "The White Steed" . . . His new play will be produced by a youngster named Eddie Choate . . . The play hasn't gone into rehearsal yet, and in the meantime Choate has to earn a living. And, so, last night at the premiere of "Skylark" Choate was at the Morosco Theater—collecting tickets at the door.

IL DUCE: Emil Lengyl, author of the new book, "The Danube," returned from Europe and was greeted by Eugene Lyons, who wrote "Assignment in Utopia." "How'd you get home?" Lyons asked. "I came," explained the war-zone refugee, "on the nervous Rex" . . . Broadway Association: The two toughest members of the Broadway Squad toured all the hotels in the neighborhood last night looking for hoodlums living there and getting them out . . . Jim Farley: Pat Beacom, young Democratic leader from West Virgina, had an important committee chairmanship in the National Young Democratic organization ear-marked for him—but blew it by becoming vice chairman of the "McNutt for President" club.

RUDY VALLEE: Lou Holtz, who appeared on your radio show until your final broadcast and who now is starring at Loew's State, had wondered about the advisability of using a risque joke submitted by Al Schwartzberg, the gag writer . . . "It's not risque," the gag writer protested. "It has a double meaning" . . . "No, I won't use it," Holtz declared . . . "Okay, then," Schwartzberg compromised, extracting a coin from his pocket, "let's toss for it. Double entendre—or nothing."

BETTE DAVIS: Vinton Freedley, the producer, is trying to locate you for "Young Man With a Horn." Hurry if you want the role—because Margaret Sullavan probably will get it . . . J. Edgar Hoover: Wasn't the neutrality portion of your speech before the police chiefs' convention included at the request of the President? . . . Joseph P. Kennedy: Your son, Joe Kennedy, jr., has been in town the last two nights. He told us politics will be his career—and that he'll start by studying law . . . Cordell Hull: If the war continues, the White House social season will be very much curtailed.

PRESIDENT JAMES B. CONANT: The class of '24 held its fifteenth reunion recently, attended by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., Lieut. Gov. Charles Poletti, Novelist Van Wyck Mason, Ogden Nash, Bobby Jones, Oliver LaFarge and Corliss Lamont . . . Ivan Black, their classmate, who now is a radio and theatrical publicist, was the sole entertainer and delivered a gag lecture . . . At the class' tenth reunion the lone entertainer had been a strip-teaser . . . "This proves one thing," said Nash, "it takes 5 years for a Harvard man to eschew sex for satire."

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MANUFACTURERS: Secretary of Commerce Harry Hopkins is concerned about the current building up of inventories, and will make a public statement about its ill effect upon recovery . . . Nelson Rockefeller: De Hirsh Margulies, the city news district reporter whose water colors were purchased by your Museum of Modern Art, will present his one-man exhibit at the A. C. Gallery on October 29 . . . Chamber of Commerce: John Steinbeck left Manhattan yesterday to return to his farm. His parting words were: "Thell with New York."

GOV. OLSEN: Nunnally Johnson, who wrote the screen play for "The Grapes of Wrath," is writing a magazine article about the production of the movie . . . In that article he probably will reveal the steps taken by Twentieth Century-Fox to ascertain whether Steinbeck was accurate in describing the plight of the Oakies . . . One of the most famous private detective agencies was employed to make the investigation, including a check-up on the Associated Farmers there. Its report indicated that the story was accurate—and so Zanuck proceeded to produce it.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 13.—At the premiere of "Babes in Arms" an usher suddenly swept down the aisle and plunked a basket of flowers in Mickey Rooney's lap. Mickey's face bore a puzzled expression. He groped around for a card, found one, studied it and let out a howl. "Dear Mickey," the note scribbled, "remember the Capitol? (Signed) Judy" . . . Lowdown on the rib is this: The morning after Mickey concluded his personal appearance engagement at the New York Capitol with Judy Garland and the "Wizard of Oz," he returned to present Judy with a bouquet of American Beauties. Marching down the orchestra, looking like a trailer for a Pasadena rose parade, the audience spotted Rooney and stampeded. Result was Judy couldn't go on with her act and slunk back, glassy-eyed, to her dressing room. Mickey sent flowers later to apologize for bringing flowers earlier . . . And though it took her almost six weeks, Judy finally got even with Mickey.

HOPPER

"Fine Thing" caustically observed John Garfield when he looked over the foreign buildings at the Fair: "We lend them billions and they pay us back in pavilions!"

Wonder whether Joe E. Brown can smoke a cigar while sitting in a dentist's chair having a tooth filled. His offspring, Joe, jr., makes his movie bow opposite Jane Withers while Joe's young son, Donald, will be seen in a scene with Shirley Temple. They're sure doing things up Brown . . . Bob Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck still think peace will be declared in time for them to enjoy a European honeymoon. But then Bob is the fellow who predicted no war at all.

Dorothy Lamour's new turban-shawl hat reminds me of a fugitive from a Foregin Legion picture—it has everything in it but Doug, Junior . . . Orson Welles, who learned all about fingers from Hollywood, has three in a sling shot. Claims he ripped them trying to open a can of his sponsor's soup. Gosh I'm glad my sponsor sells oranges, not bananas!

I loved Lucius Beebe's description of Jack McLean's new wrist-watch—"it had a chain as big as leg irons." But what about the one Lucius wears across his manly chest—that one looks like a daisy chain of portholes! When you see pictures of Hedy Lamarr in a peasant costume pushing half a lawn mower around you can understand why she's fighting for $5,000 a week instead of $750—she wants to buy the other half of that lawn mower!

Bubbles Schinasi is rehearsing as a mother. She almost floored hubby Wayne Morris when she stepped off a train carrying a baby—doll. The stand-in will be replaced by the real infant a jump ahead of Santa Claus.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

By International News Service

Hollywood, Oct. 13.—Dorothy Lamour and Tyrone Power teamed in "Johnny Apollo" is really one for the books. I don't know when I've heard a bit of casting that seemed more unusual to me—unless it would be Garbo and Mickey Rooney. But maybe that's because I always think of La Lamour in a sarong, which she has apparently abandoned for good after "Disputed Passage."

LOUELLA PARSONS

Anyway, Dorothy is checking in on the Twentieth Century Fox lot for the first time next month to play the femme lead in Sam Engle's gangster story. When Darryl Zanuck found he could borrow papa's pet glamour girl, he decided to postpone "The Mark of Zorro" until a later date, and immediately made plans to get "Johnny" before the cameras. Also in the cast is Edward Arnold, as Tyrone's father, and this father-and-son motif is an important angle in the story.

You never heard such enthusiasm as Marlene Dietrich expressed over Irving Berlin's songs for his Broadway musical. I walked onto the "Destry Rides Again" set just after he left and Marlene told me she wouldn't hesitate about accepting his offer to star her on Broadway except that she is afraid she would be away from pictures too long. Joe Pasternak, who started her back on the road to fame, has another movie idea for her in a story with a Chinese background—and from what he told me, it sounds as if Marlene will go glamorous again. Joe had much to say about la Dietrich and so did Jimmy Stewart, who says he has never enjoyed making a picture more.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Wedding bells ring tomorrow for Irwin Shaw and Marian Edwards. He authored "Bury the Dead" and "The Gentle People" and she is Spitz Edwards' daughter; saw the Gary Coopers, Tyrone Power and Annabella, Irene and Elliot Gibbons (Cedric's brother) dining at Perino's; stopped to chat with Princess Pignatelli, the Leo Morrisons, Edgar Allan Woolf, the Zeppo Marxes, Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Taylor; Osa Johnson is giving the San Diego Zoo a pet monkey she brought back from Africa; Bobby Breen parts company with his tonsils on Monady.

Kay Francis is heading a Red Cross chapter at the Westside Tennis Club; Alice Marble, tennis champ, and Bill Frawley have been playing golf every day; Myron Selznick hosting a housewarming party at his new Beverly Hills home; the Al Rogells celebrating six months of married life with a dinner at the La Maze;

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Impartial Indictments

The Department of Justice has obtained an indictment charging five officials of the teamsters' union and the teamsters' local with a conspiracy to tie up public and private construction by strikes and lockouts. In thus launching suits against a union for violation of the Sherman antitrust act, the Department of Justice has taken a step that may call down upon its head the imprecations of organized labor. Yet equality before the law means, or should mean, that labor unions are no less subject to prosecution for conspiracies in restraint of trade than are employers of labor.

There can be no doubt that the local jurisdictional dispute between the engineers and the teamsters' union over the operation of concrete mixers has tied up construction on public and private buildings in the District and obstructed trade in the materials used on construction of such buildings. The question at issue, however, is whether the strikes, boycotts and threats employed by the teamsters' union to force construction companies to employ only members of the teamsters' union on concrete mixer trucks constitutes an illegal conspiracy in restraint of trade. That question will be decided in court.

Whatever the outcome of the suit, however, it will serve a most useful purpose in giving notice that the Department of Justice intends to attack restraints of trade whether practiced by labor or capital. Perhaps the shock of the indictment will also spur leaders of organized labor to take more effective action to suppress the jurisdictional strife that is the plague of many industries, but is nowhere so obstructive and maddeningly futile as in the building industry.

There is no reason at all to suppose that the action taken is evidence of an antilabor bias on the part of the Department of Justice. Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold stated recently that it is the "clear duty of the antitrust division to investigate and attack all of the restraints which hamper experimental organization and experimental techniques in building."

That pronouncement is fair warning to building trades employers and suppliers of building materials, as well as building trade employes, to be prepared for trouble if investigations indicate that they have interfered with free enterprise in the industry.

Pandemonium Reigned

According to report "pandemonium broke out" at the convention banquet of the Nation's postmasters, here on Thursday night, when Postmaster General Farley rose to the strains of "The Sidewalks of New York."

No slight on Mr. Farley's deserved popularity is involved in the observation that tributes of this sort seem something of a hangover from the days when postmasters owed their appointments to partisan pull and were compelled by the instinct of self-preservation to curry favor with political overlords. And perhaps a little less "pandemonium," of the old-fashioned political variety, is in order since the passage of the Ramspeck-O'Mahoney act, which put first, second and third class postmasters under the merit system of appointment.

Now that all postmasters are disbarred from partisan activity, protected against dismissal for political reasons, and assured of tenure of office during good behavior, they are under no compulsion to stage political demonstrations. And when they do it unfortunately arouses suspicion that the demonstrators have not yet broken the ties that bind them to their political pasts.

The improvement of the postal service, which is sure to result from extension of the merit system, will, of course, come only gradually, because postmasters who are products of the spoils system will only be eliminated by slow degrees. Moreover, it takes a good deal more than an executive order or a legislative measure to transform a political appointee into a high grade, professional civil servant. And it will doubtless take a long time, too, to persuade postmasters that their jobs will be no less secure if they do not raise the roof in honor of their political chief.

And it is all a little complicated by the fact that it is so easy for anybody, postmaster or Post editor, to be enthusiastic about Mr. Farley.

There Is No Excuse

Let us strain our imaginations for a moment to envisage a "National Committee to Involve America in Foreign Wars," composed of 38 personally estimable Congressmen, using the House Office Building as its address and soliciting financial contributions on Congressional stationery, from munition makers, international bankers and just plain suckers like you who read or us who write.

Such a committee, it may be categorically asserted, would have short shrift. And the representatives who composed it would, not long after the committee folded up, undoubtedly be retired by the constituents who had mistakenly elected them.

And why would such a committee be intolerable? Not merely because its purpose would seem hateful to every honest citizen but primarily because the idea of Congressmen soliciting funds from the public for any purpose, good or evil, is wholly at variance with the spirit and character of the American form of government. Indeed there could be no more certain way to break down that system than for the elected representatives of the people to become professional propagandists, for any cause.

Intelligently envisaged, it is not the purpose but the fact of Congressional propagandizing which does, and should, arouse resentment.

If a group of Congressmen should band together to ask contributions to purchase bibles for children in the public schools it would still be a wholly improper activity. For none can draw a sure line between righteous and unrighteous propaganda. And if a Congressman stoops to solicit funds for purposes which at first glance seem desirable it will not be long before others will be stooping lower to solicit for purposes in which the veneer of high morality or lofty patriotism will be transparent.

For this reason Representative Woodrum of Virginia performed a notable service in the House, this week, when he called attention to a "National Committee to Keep America Out of Foreign Wars," composed of 37 Republican Congressmen and one lone Democrat. On Government stationery, Mr. Woodrum revealed, this committee—or at least its most active member—has been asking citizens for "substantial contributions" to be used "to offset the New Deal war-hysteria campaign."

As Mr. Woodrum pointed out, this looks extraordinarily like a racket. "We have condemned the utilities," he said, "we have condemned Dr. Townsend. But at least they had to have offices uptown . . . they did not set up their committees under the dome of the Capitol."

In the discussion which followed, some members of this Republican propaganda committee said they did not realize it was soliciting funds. Some pointed out that they are veterans of the last war, whose patriotism cannot be impugned. Some said that nothing the committee has done is any worse than the propaganda in which the Roosevelt Administration has indulged on many and various occasions.

But neither by counterattack nor by alibi did any of the Congressmen involved meet the fundamental point raised by Mr. Woodrum. None of them attempted to answer his unanswerable assertion that "there is no excuse for any member of this House having to ask for public contributions to make his views upon public questions known to the American people. . . . It has never been done before in the history of this Government."

All who value the American form of government will hope that this will prove the last, as well as the first, occasion on which our lawmakers will debase themselves to solicit money from the public in order to influence the course of legislation, whether for partisan or any other purpose.

October Weather

Every October Washington has a warm spell, even though it does not often attain the temperature of 92 degrees recorded on Tuesday. But every October, going back only as far as 1930, we have had a record of at least 81 degrees, and twice we have had 88 degrees.

On these occasions of summer temperatures in October, the wiseacres invariably observe: "exceptional weather," "unprecedented weather," or even "most unseasonable weather."

Every October, from 1930 to 1938, we have had temperatures in the thirties and four times, between 1930 and 1938 inclusive, we have had temperatures below freezing. And on these occasions also the wiseacres have proclaimed it "most unseasonable" or "most unprecedented."

Perhaps it would be intelligent, and therefore helpful, to stop talking about regularly recurrent phenomena as though they had never happened before. It is bad enough to confront a war which threatens all of Western civilization, and to listen to all the nonsense that is talked about insulating that, without adding a lot of wholly uninformed discussion of the weather.

Maybe one will say, yes we often have warm weather early in October, but it turns cold later on. Sometimes so and sometimes not.

In October of 1935 the low was 35 degrees, on October 9, and the high of 82 degrees came on October 22. Last year we had 38 degrees on October 8, and 88 degrees on October 19.

Where facts and records can be so readily determined, it seems wise to close with the safe conclusion that, when all is said and done, October in Washington is a truly glorious month.

The Curb On Shipping

Opposition to the shipping clauses of the neutrality bill has reached formidable proportions in the Senate. Legislators who at first concentrated their attention upon the arms embargo are coming to realize that the entire bill, as it stands, would result in sweeping nearly half the American merchant fleet from the seas. At last the need for amendment of the shipping provisions is beginning to be recognized.

Chairman Bailey of the Senate Commerce Committee has played an important part in bringing the destructive aspects of Section 2 to light. He naturally favors such control of American shipping as is necessary to avoid any serious risk of the United States becoming involved in the European War. But he no less properly realizes that some of the costly restraints which would be imposed on our merchant fleet are supported by nothing more valid than hysteria.

"This prohibition," the Senator said, "is highly artificial and arbitrary. It prohibits the transportation of cargo in American vessels to belligerent countries regardless of whether the cargo is loaded in the United States or in some other country; regardless of the nature of the cargo, whether absolute contraband, conditional contraband or noncontraband; regardless of whether the port of destination and the waters traversed are in a combat zone or not, and regardless of whether or not the destination or the waters traversed are blockaded, patrolled or mined."

Every phase of the neutrality bill ought to be examined with two basic questions in mind: Does it actually minimize the risk of the United States being drawn into the war? If so, is the advantage to be gained worth more, in terms of the national welfare, than the sacrifice of neutral rights which is involved? Obviously the shipping restrictions now in the bill will not stand up under such scrutiny. The risk of operating American ships in the Pacific, for instance, is negligible, while the cost of suspending such services needlessly would be substantial.

It does not follow, however, that the Senate should accept Senator Bailey's proposed amendment as worded. He suggests that the President be authorized to exempt from provisions of the bill shipping lines running to countries "only nominally at war." Such vague language has no place in so important a measure. Its effect would be to dump into the lap of the President a responsibility which no executive should be asked to meet. The imposition of wartime restrictions upon American vessels is a legislative question on which Congress must make the fundamental decisions.

Instead of dodging this issue, Congress should examine more realistically the dangers, if any, involved in continuation of shipping services, so far as cargo is concerned, at the discretion of the vessel owners. Its task is to separate essential safeguards from indefensible penalization of American shipping and commerce. That can readily be done without asking the President to differentiate between real war which may not be nominal and nominal war which may not be real.

Amy Lowell's Cigars

Louis Untermeyer in Harper's.

Miss Lowell came down the stairs. She waved no plumes and rattled no sabers, but she seemed to be advancing at the head of a victorious army. There was gunfire in the air; I thought I heard bugles. She endeavored to put me, a stranger, at my ease. She offered me a cigarette, pulling out a drawer which seemed to contain the contents of the United Cigar Stores, Incorporated.

"No, thank you," I said, "I do not smoke."

"I hope you don't mind that I do," said she, taking up a rich-looking cigar. "My doctor tells me the paper in cigarettes is injurious. Besides, I prefer tobacco wrapped in its own leaf."

The shock was only for a moment. I had heard of Hungarian duchesses who smoked cigars imperturbably and, years later, I was to know a Viennese grand dame who cherished a meerschaum pipe. But I was unprepared to watch a Lowell, the sister of Harvard University's president, knocking the ash from a colorado claro.

The apparition seemed the more grotesque because of Miss Lowell's size. I do not know what she weighed at the time, but, although she was 40, it must have been well over 200 pounds. To make the effect still more incongruous, she preferred high-collared dresses sprinkled with beads and lavishly trimmed with passementerie. Some glandular defect made the heavy body seem more swollen and the short frame more stunted than it really was. ("Lord," she would say, "I'm a walking sideshow.")

Yet the rakish cigar and the abnormal stoutness were forgotten five minutes after she had seated herself.

One saw a woman who was not only intelligent but—there is no other word for it—pretty. The most implacable adversary, more masculine than most males, she could be the most charming feminine persuader. I think I apologized for not smoking. Then we went in to dinner.

Speed War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The isolationist Senators tell us that all of Europe is not worth the life of a single American boy. They could more truthfully say that no automobile is worth the life of a single American boy. For there is nought but theoretical death for our boys in Europe; there is actual death for them over here. Torn and mangled on the highways of our Nation, tens of thousands have been crushed to death; hundreds of thousands—in fact, millions—have been terribly injured.

The Senators could be right: no automobile is worth the life of a single American boy. Stop this slaughter! Stop the sale of automobiles! We are not at war in Europe, but we are killing our boys at home—killing them by the tens of thousands. We do not need to concern ourselves about death in Europe: the Senators should know that we are doing pretty well at the killing business right here at home. DAVID WHITNEY.

Economics And Morals

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Winston Churchill, on the air the other day, tried to enlist our sympathies for England's struggle to erase the moral blot of Naziism by referring sympathetically to the Union's struggle against the moral blot of slavery in the Civil War. Can Mr. Churchill have forgotten that only by the narrowest of margins was England prevented from entering that war on the side of the South? This, of course, because England's pocketbook was threatened by the Union blockade of Southern cotton. One wonders whether, if it were equally to her advantage economically, she would not be as ready to side with Naziism. AN ISOLATIONIST.

Washington, Oct. 6.

Pyrrhic Victory?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "A war to the finish with Hitler."

But England and France cannot hope alone to defeat Germany, whom they could not with the help of Russia and Italy defeat before.

"There can be no compromise . . ."

None, so long as the Allies count on our support. They have called on us for arms. They will ask for money, then men.

To repeal the neutrality act, or to alter it in favor of England and France, is to encourage them in the belief that all these things may be obtained. While that belief persists, there will be no armistice, no compromise, no hearing terms of peace.

Ninety million Germans. Concrete fortresses and steel. Our arms and money, and our men, may enable England and France to break through. Then let us have no illusions, it will not be Hitlerism alone we shall have helped to destroy. It will be the power of the German people.

In bitterness the Germans will be called Huns. They will be charged with atrocities and the willful bombing of cities. The Allies will say they were too lenient at Versailles; it will not be enough for them again to set up a democratic regime. They will be intent upon removing forever the menace of a united German people.

We shall have fought to save democracy, only to obtain a medley of tiny, impoverished, warring states where Germany stood before. We shall have gotten the Germans out of Poland . . . only to see Russia inherit Central Europe.

CHRISTOPHER DUDLEY.

Washington, Oct. 1.

Of Lay Importance

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The recent announcement that Washington has been designated the seat of a new archdiocese of the Catholic Church and will have equal rank with that of Baltimore is, of course, of direct interest only to those engaged or associated in religious affairs. But it should be of special significance to those interested in other phases of our city's life, particularly its political progress.

According to the Catholic Encyclopedia, there are a number of important conditions which must be met before such a new division of the Catholic Church may be created. Among these we find that it must contain a sufficient population and have at its disposal the resources necessary to maintain its officers, a cathedral church (the physical center of administration), and the necessary general administrative expenses. In other words, in church affairs the proposed new division must meet conditions exactly similar to those in the political field, the fulfillment of which has justified the creation of self-governing and self-sustaining municipalities and other political subdivisions.

If, therefore, in the view of the Catholic Church, our city has shown itself capable of fulfilling these conditions in the religious field to the point where it can be placed upon a plane of equality with the Archdiocese of Baltimore and consequently with all the other archdioceses in this country, is it not reasonable to expect that our Federal Government will not longer withhold from it and its citizens that recognition in the political field which it has long deserved through its fulfillment of these similar conditions in that field? Its population is larger than several of the States and most of the other cities of the United States; it certainly bears its full share of the general administrative expenses of the local government; and it far exceeds quite a number of the States in the fulfillment of its Federal obligations, including taxes.

Let us, therefore, hope that those who are charged with the responsibility of the governmental affairs of the District will now recognize the fact of this city's importance in the political field just as the Catholic Church has already done in the religious field.

Whose Loss?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There seems to be a lot of confusion and considerable hysteria in regard to the "cash and carry" clause of the neutrality bill.

Let it be understood that the U. S. Government is not going to sell any arms, munitions or supplies to anyone. If any kind of goods are purchased in this country by the belligerents, they will be purchased from private parties and corporations.

It is altogether probable that Bethlehem Steel Co. and Douglas Airplane Co. know how to get paid for the goods they sell and that there is no need for any one to get "all hot and bothered" over the matter. When it comes to buying goods the buyer always has to comply with the terms and requirements of the seller, and I have a suspicion that Bethlehem Steel Co. knows more about how to get the money for its goods than all the Congressmen on Capitol Hill.

If, however, they should fail to get paid for any of their goods, it will be their individual loss, and not the loss of the Government; and the Government will be under no obligation to assist in making the collection. So, what is "all the shootin" and shouting about?"

Dies Committee Vs. American League

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have noted with much interest the letter to you of October 7 by Ellen Kaye, deprecating the "recent raid on the office of the League for Peace and Democracy by the Dies committee."

While denying the right of any authority to raid the office of an organization without service of a warrant, I am inclined to the belief that Mrs. Kaye is quite too sensitive in this matter.

The title of the organization has a profound appeal to many and on the surface is most innocuous. Is her concern based on a desire that the formalities of the law under the Bill of Rights always be invoked whether by the Dies committee or any other Federal agency of investigation? Or can it be true that there are sinister designs being perpetrated by the inner circle of the League for Peace and Democracy which she would not have disclosed and which, if disclosed, would in effect destroy the Bill of Rights which she so eloquently upholds?

A. C. McALLISTER.

Washington, Oct. 11.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I protest strongly against the recent activities of the Dies committee in seizing the membership lists of so-called "Communist Front" organizations, particularly that of the American League for Peace and Democracy. The taking of these lists has been without semblance of legal right, for the sole purpose of frightening Government workers from participating in liberal movements.

While not a member of the American League I am acquainted with the mentality of its membership; largely young people with a sincere interest in social justice, who believe that the reforms they seek can be effected by parliamentary methods, mainly supporters of the New Deal. To attack them is to strike at the New Deal, to coerce them from exercising the rights of free speech and assembly, to purge from Government service those who support an orderly overhauling of our economic system.

JOHN W. ILIFF.

Washington, Oct. 11.

To the Edtior of The Post—Sir: Are you aware that the records of the Washington branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy have been subpenaed by the Dies committee? Here in the United States, where civil liberties are supposed to be a birthright, I would not have believed it possible that a progressive organization, sincerely fighting for the best interest of the American people, should suddenly be treated as though it consisted of a criminal group.

It begins to seem as if instead of worrying about the war in Europe and neutrality, it is time to realize the losses that committees of the Dies caliber have meant to the ordinary American citizen.

No labor union, no civic group, no peace organization can feel free to act as long as the Dies committee assumes the liberty of viciously attacking such groups.

Such action as the Dies committee is taking is a veiled attack upon the principles for which these groups stand—the right of employes to organize, the Wagner act, the fair labor standards act, in short, the principles of the New Deal.

It seems ironic that a committee which was originated to investigate un-American activities should resort to such un-American tactics.

The Post Impressionist

Iberian Tradition

[Excerpted from a speech by Archibald MacLeish at the dedication of the Hispanic Room, Library of Congress, October 12.]

From the beginning of the sixteenth century there has been accumulating on these continents a body of recorded American experience of the very greatest importance to anyone concerned to understand the American earth and the relation of that earth to the men who live upon it. Because this experience has been recorded in several languages and because it has been deposited in scattered places—places as far apart as Santiago de Chile and Bogota and Buenos Aires and Mexico City and New Orleans and St. Louis and Quebec—because, furthermore, it has been overlaid with the continuing importation of European literature and European thought—for all these reasons the recorded American experience has not influenced the common life of the Americas as it should have influenced it. It has not been useful to an understanding of the Americas as it should have been useful.

Other men who know these continents better than I know them—other men who know these records of the American experience better than I shall ever know them—will think of many instances in their own lives when the words of men who lived in the Americas before them have made suddenly clear and suddenly explicable matters they had long wished to understand. But even in my shallow knowledge of these things there is one such indebtedness. Some 12 years ago in a Paris library I came upon a copy of Bernal Diaz's "True History of the Conquest of New Spain." There, in that still living, still human, still sharply breathing and believable story of Mexico it seemed to me that I understood for the first time the central American experience—the experience which is American because it can be nothing else—the experience of all those who, of whatever tongue, are truly American—the experience of the journey westward from the sea into the unknown and dangerous country beyond which lies the rich and lovely city for which men hope.

I tried at that time to make a poem of this understanding. The argument of my poem began—

Of that world's conquest and the fortunate wars,
Of the great report and expectation of honor,
How in their youth they stretched sail, how fared they.

Westward under the wind, by wave wandered,
Shoaled ship at the last at the ends of ocean,
How they were marching in the lands beyond,

Of the difficult ways there were and the winter's snow,
Of the city they found in the good lands, how they lay in it,
How there was always the leaves and the days going . . .

Other men will say the same thing in other words and many of them better. Historians will tell us how their study of the documents and monuments of Mexico and Peru opened to their minds the true perspective of American civilization—a civilization of which the first European date is the year 1523, when a school for Indian boys was opened in Mexico City—of which the first American date lies deep under the limestone waters of Yucatan and the iron earth of Guatamala. Scholars will speak of the year 1539 when the first book to be printed in the Americas was printed in the City of Mexico. Lovers of human liberty will remember the name of Carlos de Siguenza y Gongora who, in the year 1691, at a time when witches were being hung in Salem, successfully defended against the ecclesiastics of Mexico his opinion that the great eclipse of that year was a natural event. They will quote against all witch burners in all centuries and countries his noble words: "I stood with my quadrant and telescope viewing the (blackened) sun, extremely happy and repeatedly thanking God for having granted that I might behold what so rarely happens in a given place and about which there are so few observations in the books."

No man living in the United States can truly say he knows the Americas unless he has a knowledge of these things—a knowledge of this other American past, this older American past which shares with ours the unforgettable experience of the journey toward the West and the westward hope.

What we are doing in this room, then, is to dedicate to the uses of the citizens of the United States, and to the uses of learners and readers everywhere, these records of the American experience. In this Hispanic Room of the library, students of the Americas may follow the great Iberian tradition which has populated with its ideas and its poetry by far the greater part of these two continents. Here they may read the rich and various works written in these continents in the Iberian tongues—the two great tongues which, with our own, have become the American language. Here, if our hopes are realized, Americans may some day find the greatest collection of Hispanic literature and scholarship ever gathered in one place.

There are men in the world today—and many rather than few—who say that the proper study of mankind is not man, but a particular kind of man. There are those who teach that the only cultural study proper to a great people is its own culture. There are those also who say that the only real brotherhood is that blood brotherhood for which so many wars have been fought and by which so many deaths are still justified. The dedication of this room and of this collection of books is a demonstration of the fact that these opinions are not valid in the Americas: that in the Americas, peopled by so many hopes, so many sufferings, so many races, the highest brotherhood is still the brotherhood of the human spirit and the true study is the study of the best.

This is the belief of the people of this Republic expressed by the action of their national library in the dedication of this room.

The English Race

HOW ODD it is, to be sure, that the British, meaning, actually, the English, who have sent this country fewer immigrants than Andorra since the United States put on long pants and began to carry matches and shave, nevertheless, have more influence among us than any of those foreign elements who came here in bewildered droves to engage in strong-back toil but still, even to the third generation, are smoothly regarded as being at least a little bit foreign.

I have no statistics on the English immigration, and it is only by a firm effort of the will that I refrain from making up some, as those book writers and orators do who startled the public with dogmatic declarations that 60 families control 98 per cent of the wealth. However, in the course of some rather extensive getting around I have never come upon an English colony anywhere in the United States, and individual Englishmen, naturalized or otherwise, are comparatively rare.

British In U. S. Seem Aloof

THEY HAVE had other plans. Their surplus sons of the dude and demi-dude classes, after the elder ones had been bedded down in the army and navy, the civil service and the ministry, went out to Canada, Australia and Africa. The low-born followed their betters to the colonies, where their efforts counted for the empire, and a bloke didn't have to explain why "bloody" is such a bloody-awful word and why they spell "connection" with an x. Few of them came here, most of those few were not at all pleased, and they have never been conspicuous in the railroad camps or harvest fields.

Scandinavians and Germans went straight to the land in great numbers, the Poles went to Chicago, Toledo and Buffalo and the Italians huddled wherever there was hard work to be done, and did it. We got some miners from England, but more from Wales, and years ago quite a few English weavers came over, but many went back.

Notwithstanding the comparative rarity of Englishmen among us, however, there persists in the land a strange, inscrutable feeling of not exactly aloofness but something like it toward persons whose names end in vowels of Latin. This feeling is less noticeable toward persons with Scandinavian or German names but has not been wholly conquered, and there is a vague, unspoken superstition in the hearts of Americans of British descent that they are big casino even though they actively dislike England.

Feeling Is Due To Title Humbug

I AM NOT going to get mired in an analysis of all this, but I think the feeling is due in part to the humbug of titles and rank in England whereby, against our sense, we are taken in by the transformation of an ordinary Englishman into a lord in recognition of some routine service in trade or public office or, more likely, in reward for a cash contribution to a political campaign fund. Had we the same system, Jim Farley, Paul McNutt, Chip Robert, Jim Moffatt and Mrs. Perkins would have received titles long ago and Mr. Farley, entirely forsaking the name of his fathers, would now be known as Lord Rockland.

Americans would think this pretty damned funny, seeing it happen before their very eyes, and when Lord Beaverbrook, for example, pops in on us his title gets him something that he wouldn't rate as Max Aitken, even though we know that that was his, so to speak, maiden name. The English sometimes say that these titles really don't mean a thing, but that can't be so. If they didn't mean a thing, Britons wouldn't strive for and respect them as they do.

Snobbery Strong Among English

THE ORDINARY, untitled, pip-pip and toodle-oo Englishman in our midst also is undeniably someone a little more special than an American of equal intelligence and bearing or a German, Italian or Spaniard. He is an Englishman, you understand, and is puzzled and a little disdainful at the gaping politeness of Americans eager to agree with him so as not to hurt his feelings and gain his good opinion. At home an Englishman is just another Englishman, and nobody draws him into conversation to hear him pronounce the word "bath" or "secretary."

The Americans of other breeds sometimes form clubs not with the treacherous motives of the anti-American bund but to promote good Americanism among their numbers and, incidentally, ballyhoo traits of their stock which they deem admirable. Yet these often are regarded as propaganda circles or foreignizing influences and are resented on that account. The English, or British, don't do this. For one reason, there aren't enough of them, and, for another, snobbery is so strong through all the grades that they couldn't get together. For still another, they don't have to. Something in the American nature that hasn't been lived out instinctively performs the service of a propaganda bureau. Neither nudging nor expenditure is required.

Today And Tomorrow

George Washington Hit 'Pressure Groups' As Confusing

JUST RECENTLY I have had the opportunity to read for the first time an interesting exchange of letters between George Washington and his nephew, Bushrod Washington. The correspondence is too long to be reproduced in this place, but those who are interested in the full text will find the letters in Jared Sparks' "The Writings of George Washington" (Volume IX, pages 198-211).

Bushrod writes to Washington on September 27, 1786, to say that "We have lately instituted a society in these lower counties (of Virginia), called the 'Patriotic Society.'" Its object, he explains, is "to inquire into the state of public affairs" and he goes on to say that the society has just held a meeting previous to the meeting of the Virginia Assembly and that it will hold another after the adjournment. "Our design," says Bushrod, is "to instruct our delegates what they ought to do," and then "to inquire what they have done." Bushrod asks Washington to give him his opinion.

Pressure Groups Create Confusion

GEORGE WASHINGTON replied in a letter written from Mount Vernon and dated September 30, 1786. He explains that while he has not had time to reach a "decided opinion," yet "generally speaking, I have seen as much evil as good result from such societies as you describe the constitution of yours to be; they are a kind of imperium in imperio, and as often clog as facilitate public measures." What Washington calls an "imperium in imperio" we now call a "pressure group."

Washington distrusted them. "What certainty is there that societies in a corner or a remote part of a State can possess that knowledge which is necessary for them to decide on many important questions which may come before an Assembly?"

He cites the confusion created in Massachusetts by similar societies and then says to Bushrod: "You may say no such matters are in contemplation by your society; granted. A snowball gathers by rolling; possibly a line can be drawn between occasional meetings for special purposes, and a standing society to direct with local views and partial information the affairs of the Nation, which cannot be well understood but by a large and comparative view of circumstances. Where is this so likely to enter as in the General Assembly of the people? What figure then must a delegate make who comes there with his hands tied and his judgment forestalled? His very instructors perhaps (if they had nothing sinister in view) were they present at all the information and arguments, which would come forward, might be the first to change their sentiments."

No Doubt Remains On Embargo Action

THE OUTSTANDING fact about the Senate debate is that after a thorough hearing and examination of the case of the minority, the weight of "information and argument" against that case has been so overwhelming that there is no longer any doubt about what is the considered judgment of the Senate. It is that the surest way to protect the peace and security of this country is to replace the embargo on arms by an embargo on shipping in the war zones and an embargo on war credits.

Though there are still some speeches to be delivered, the debate is really over; the ablest men on both sides have spoken. It is not too early to summarize the debate.

The task of the majority has been to prove that the proposed bill will effectively preserve American neutrality in the war, and augment American security during and after the war.

Undoubtedly the most formidable contention which they have had to meet is that since the President does not pretend to be impartial as between Hitler and the Allies and since he has frequently avowed his desire to help the democracies by measures "short of war," anything proposed by the Administration is the road to war. The problem of the Senate majority has been to find convincing evidence, not merely verbal assurances, that whatever may be Mr. Roosevelt's feelings, he will not and cannot violate his solemn pledge to the Congress that the policy of the United States Government will be one of nonparticipation in the war.

Party Lines Split To Support Bill

THAT EVIDENCE has been found in the weeks which have elapsed since Congress assembled, began consulting with the President and the State Department, and deliberating both privately and publicly. How can we know that? We can know it by the action of Mr. Roosevelt's political opponents. The very men who have disagreed with him most thoroughly on domestic matters and have distrusted him most acutely are, with very few exceptions, firm supporters of the bill. On the Republican side, all four Senators from Maine and Vermont, Senator Taft and Senator Barbour; on the Democratic side, Senators Glass and Byrd, of Virginia; Tydings, of Maryland; Bailey of North Carolina; George, of Georgia; Burke, of Nebraska. In fact, one may say that with the exception of Senator Vandenberg, the regular Republicans and the regular Democrats support the bill. That is the most convincing practical evidence one could ask that the bill is in good faith what its sponsors say it is.

Once that had been proved to the satisfaction of the hard-headed conservatives in the Senate, the debate was really over. For the debating points of the minority were easily and quickly answered.

Thus, they contended that it is "unneutral" to change the law after the war breaks out. But it has been shown, notably by Senator Bailey and Senator Taft, that Hitler was on notice last spring and summer that the Congress intended to revise the neutrality law and that the current action of the Congress is the continuation of a legislative procedure which began months before the invasion of Poland. It has also been shown that the minority is quite ready to revise the neutrality law now. And so the whole argument has fallen to the ground

Rebuttals Given To All Arguments

THE MINORITY have argued that to sell war supplies to the Allies will give Americans a vested interest in the Allied cause. The conclusive answer is that at least 87 per cent of war supplies will be sold even if the embargo is retained. They have argued that when the cash runs out, there will be a cry to extend credit; but if there is anything in this contention, the arms embargo is no protection since it applies only to about 13 per cent of what the Allies may need to buy. They have argued that the American people ought not to sell the instruments of "mass murder;" but since they are willing to sell the steel to make guns, the cotton to make the explosives, the materials to make bombers, there is more sentimentality than righteousness in the argument. They have said that the bill must not be passed because the Nazis would dynamite American factories; but this has been met by the feeling, expressed by Senator Taft, that "we are not going to change our policies for fear that crimes will result in the United States" and that anyway "we have an effective police force of our own."

All that really remains of the argument is Senator Vandenberg's thesis that the repeal of the arms embargo will be "a symbol" of our intention to intervene.

The answer to that is that the minority have tried to make it a symbol, and if anyone regards it as a symbol they have only themselves to blame. It is indubitable that the majority are legislating for the purpose of protecting American security without participating in the war. If there is any misunderstanding abroad about that purpose, it will be due wholly to the speeches of men like Senator Borah and Senator Vandenberg. What is more, from the curious conclusion to Senator Vandenberg's speech, I am under the impression that he is aware of this danger and is troubled by it.

Unanimous Vote For Bill Urged

A RESPONSIBLE man might well be troubled. But there is a way to remove the misunderstanding and to cure the difficulty. When the debate is concluded and the bill is ready for its final vote, if, as now seems certain, it is sure to be passed, it would be a very handsome and patriotic thing if Senator Vandenberg moved the adoption of the bill without a final roll call. This would be only a gesture, since the views of every Senator are clearly on the record. But the gesture would mean to the world that the bill is not a symbol of intervention, since even its opponents assent to it and that the Congress, though divided before it deliberated, is united before the world.

Hoover's Proposal

By Mark Sullivan

Symbol Of Humanity

WHEN PRESIDENT Roosevelt called Congress into special session to repeal the arms embargo, observers estimated that about 66 Senators (out of the 96) would favor repeal. Today, after two weeks of Senate debate, and immense discussion by the country, it is apparent that the early estimate remains accurate. The Senate seems set to give about a two-thirds vote for repeal.

After this is done, and if the House agrees, the United States will have made an important decision. It will have decided to permit its citizens to make arms and sell them to any and all belligerents without limitation. That is, without limitation of the kind or quantity of arms.

True, there will be limitation of a different kind. Our arms manufacturers will be required to sell only for cash (or very short term credit), with the purchaser taking title before the arms leave the United States. Also it will be required that the arms be carried away from America in ships provided by the purchaser—no American ship will be permitted to carry arms.

Tend To Restrict Spread Of War

THESE LIMITATIONS, it will be observed, are of a special nature and have a special purpose. These "cash and carry" limitations are designed to safeguard ourselves. They are not limitations designed to make war less terrible. Except that they tend to restrict the spread of the war geographically, they do nothing to minimize or check the dreadfulness of war.

In this situation, ex-President Hoover comes forward to suggest a limitation of a different kind. He would limit the character of the arms that American manufacturers may make and sell. He would divide all arms into two classifications. These classifications, as commonly made in the past, are, first, arms for offensive war, and, second, arms for defense. Mr. Hoover now makes the classification in terms that are parallel, yet different. He makes the distinction between arms likely to be used for attack upon, or terrorizing of, civil populations; and, on the other hand, arms primarily used for strictly military purposes, especially for defensive purposes.

The arms having especial terror for civil populations are bombing planes and poison gas, together with submarines, which are a special menace to civilians traveling in ships. These arms Mr. Hoover would forbid absolutely to be made by American manufacturers for sale abroad. He would forbid them not only in the present situation but always and everywhere. He would forbid the sale of such arms either to belligerents or to neutrals, either in wartime or peacetime.

Laudable, But Hard To Put In Practice

THE OTHER SORT of arms, what may be called ordinary arms, Mr. Hoover would permit American manufacturers to make and sell as provided in our proposed neutrality measure.

To this suggestion from Mr. Hoover, the prevailing reaction in Congress and the press is that the idea is laudable and humanitarian—but too difficult to put in practice. The difficulty lies in making the distinction between the two kinds of arms. Admittedly this difficulty is great. Any distinction must be more or less arbitrary. For practically every form of arms for offense can be used also for defense. The bombing planes and poison gas Mr. Hoover names as terrors of offensive warfare against civil populations, are usable also for defensive purposes. This difficulty of distinction is given by many members of Congress and by much of the press as a reason for regarding Mr. Hoover's suggestion as impracticable.

This may be. It has been so regarded in the past. For Mr. Hoover's suggestion is not new. It was made by him when he was President, and was formally discussed at a Geneva conference. Roughly the same suggestion was made by President Roosevelt in an address to the Nation in May, 1933. On both occasions the difficulty of distinction between offensive and defensive arms was given as a reason for not adopting the suggestion.

Would Lessen War's Barbarity

YET, AT THIS time, there is merit in the suggestion even if the distinction be made wholly arbitrary or capricious. Even if we merely say we will not make for sale airplanes of a certain weight, or gas having a certain percentage of poison, that would be at least a symbol, a gesture, toward making war less barbarous. It would be a sign that for someone, somewhere, some nation, is thinking, even if not very effectively, in terms of making war less barbarous. And it would be, I think, the only such gesture in the whole wide world. Everywhere the barbarity of war expands. In proportion as new inventions or improvements are made for use in industry and civil life, as in the field of airplanes or tractors, so are those inventions at once adapted and used to make war more deadly.

Mr. Hoover's suggestion may be worth consideration, even though the distinction between the two forms of arms be arbitrary. In this field, arbitrary distinctions are not new. The Washington conference for the limitation of armament in 1922 made arbitrary distinctions between weights of ships and calibers of guns. It forbade, or limited the number of, war vessels above a certain tonnage, guns above a certain caliber.

Mr. Hoover's suggestion does not run counter to repeal of the arms embargo. It would merely qualify the repeal. If Mr. Hoover's suggestion were adopted, we would still sell, on the cash-and-carry basis, all kinds of arms except bombing planes, poison gas and submarines.

Days Of Decision

By Barnet Nover

A New Stage In The War

EASTERN PROLOGUE. At the beginning of its seventh week, the European conflict appears to be entering a new and, it may be, decisive stage.

The first act began in Poland on September 1. When the curtain fell a few weeks later, the Polish army was in ruins, the Polish government in exile and the territory of the 1918 republic completely divided between Germany and Russia. Yet until the last act of the unfolding tragedy has run its fatal course one cannot safely assume any degree of finality about the tremendous events that have occurred in eastern Europe.

Territorial conquests in war are like gains made in the midst of a poker game. They permit the winner to continue playing or, if he chooses, to play with greater abandon. But he cannot cash in these chips until the game is over.

PEACE OFFENSIVE. Hitler's Reichstag speech of October 6 was an attempt to break up Europe's grim poker game so that he could immediately cash in the chips he has acquired through the conquest of Poland. If the war continues he risks losing not merely his latest gains but everything he and Germany began with at the outset of the conflict. And the odds are not on his side.

In the first place, Great Britain and France, because of their superior resources, are in a position to stay in the game longer than he is. And, secondly, the weaker Germany's position becomes vis-a-vis the Allies, the more Hitler is likely to find himself dependent on his newly acquired Bolshevik partner, Stalin. The Fuehrer thus finds himself between the devil and the deep blue sea.

GRASPING AT STRAWS. This circumstance explains not only Hitler's Reichstag speech but the eagerness which, in the days that followed, the Nazi regime seized upon everything which even in the slightest suggested the possibility of an armistice.

Thus Premier Daladier's forthright speech in which he returned a flat negative to Hitler's peace offer was discovered in Berlin not to have closed the door entirely. It was after this inspired interpretation of the French statesman's remarks had been given currency in the Reich that the rumor reached the people of Berlin that an armistice had actually been concluded. They gave themselves over to unrestrained rejoicing. But that rumor proved as false as the hopes entertained by the Nazi government that having conquered Poland, Germany would, with the consent of the Allies, be permitted to digest its gains.

It was not until Prime Minister Chamberlain's speech had been made with its emphasis on Hitler's bad faith and Britain's determination to fight on that such hopes were finally shattered.

DAYS OF DECISION. Mr. Chamberlain spoke on Thursday. On Friday the German press called his speech an "unheard-of insult that would compel the Reich immediately to unleash its thunderbolts against the Allies. Yet even in the midst of such threats of a new blitzkrieg the Nazis continued to look for peace straws to grasp at. If Chamberlain would not make peace, would any neutral—perhaps Mr. Roosevelt—offer to mediate? To this frantic plea there was no response, at least not from Washington.

Two alternatives now face the Third Reich. It can stand still and do nothing. But with the blockade daily becoming more effective, that means submitting to slow strangulation. Or Germany can seek to win peace on its own terms by a smashing military victory over Great Britain and France. That would under no circumstances prove easy and might prove impossible. If Germany hasn't the staying power to wait out the blockade, neither is it likely that she has the man power needed to break the Maginot Line. In modern war, the advantage is with the defense.

THE BEAR MOVES NORTH. In the meantime, Germany's position has become all the more precarious because the presence on her flank of an armed and determined Britain and France has given Russia an opportunity for easy and bloodless conquests in a region which Hitler had earmarked for his own.

The Baltic has been a German lake. It promises to be a German lake no longer. Russian protectorates, in fact, if not in name, have been established over Estonia and Latvia and even over Lithuania.

That development is bad enough. But the worst, from the German point of view, has possibly not yet occurred with respect to the consequences of the German-Russian partnership in a war setting.

There is a possibility that Stalin will seek to extend Russia's authority to the Scandinavian Peninsula. The spirit of aggression feeds on itself, and, having discovered, as did Hitler before him, how easy it is to win victories over small and helpless nations, the Russian Fuehrer may not know where and when to stop. The test is at hand.

The Russo-Finnish negotiations now taking place at Moscow should throw real light on Russia's intentions. But until that situation is clarified, Germany's threatened offensive on the Western Front would be undertaken under especially dangerous circumstances.

In the meantime, the plight of Finland has aroused the wholly justified alarm of the other Scandinavian countries who see their neutrality and their independence imperiled, and it has led President Roosevelt to make earnest representations at Moscow on behalf of the little republic for whom Americans have such sincere and enthusiastic regard. The spread of the European war to the Scandinavian Peninsula is a development which neither this Nation nor any other can view with unconcern.

Bill to Control Charity Drives Drafted for D. C.

A tentative draft of a bill for control of charitable solicitations in the District was discussed yesterday by Assistant Corporation Counsel George Reber Littlehales and two representatives of the Council of Social Agencies, Mrs. Pearl B. Klein and Mrs. Olive W. Swinney.

The proposed bill, following lines suggested last year by the Council of Social Agencies and the Better Business Bureau, will provide a system of registration and permits for all soliciting organizations.

Littlehales said yesterday that he would submit the draft to Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal after clarifying a few details. A fuller opportunity for discussion by interested organizations probably will be afforded by the Commissioners when the draft comes before them, he said.

Parishioners of historic Georgetown Lutheran Church are joining with other residents of the community in celebrating church's 170th anniversary during this month and next.

The Rev. Luther Hess Waring, D. D., a former pastor, will be guest preacher tomorrow at 11 a. m., when the Rev. Harold E. Beatty will preside, and on next Thursday —"Georgetown Night"—the Rev. Charles B. Austin, of West Washington Baptist Church, is scheduled to speak, the Gordon Junior High School Glee Club will sing, and Professor Francis A. Woodward, principal, will bring greetings.

MR. BEATTY

Also scheduled is a congregational reception on October 27 and a program on Reformation Day, the 29th, at which Dr. Gould Wickey, executive secretary of the United Lutheran Church's board of education, will deliver the main address.

Ladies Aid Night Nov. 5

Women of the congregation will have their "inning" on Sunday, November 5—"Ladies' Aid Night"—when Mrs. Heber Snarr, president, will be in charge, and Dr. Stanley Billheimer, of Palmyra, will speak, and on November 26, at which time "Women's Missionary Society Night" will be celebrated. Miss Eleanor Lang is president.

Special "nights" also are planned for the Lutheran Ministerial Association, Boy Scouts and the Luther League, the latter unit now being headed by Miss Yvonne Plavidal. Bruce Weaver, of Konnorock, Va., will address the young people. Other evenings will be devoted to membership promotion and memorial gifts.

While the congregation of Georgetown Lutheran Church is proud of its glorious history, it is likewise proud of the progress being made by its various organizations, such as the Men's Bible Class, of which J. Frank Butts is president-teacher, and the Ladies' Class, with Mrs. Hilda McCord and Mrs. H. E. Beatty as teachers, and Mrs. Thelma Bonini, secretary.

Helen Alberts Leads Choir

There also is the Sunday school, of which Joseph C. Wimmer and Andrew Lindberg are superintendent and assistant superintendent, respectively, and the Young Men's Bible Class, led by John Albert and Lindberg. Miss Helen Alberts is organist-choir leader.

Local mother church of its faith; second oldest Protestant congregation in Washington, and antedating both the District of Columbia and the Constitution of the United States, Georgetown Lutheran Church's first services were held in a log cabin on the present site at Wisconsin avenue and Volta place northwest. It is said to be one of the ten oldest Lutheran churches in America.

According to tradition, George Washington once knelt in prayer in the church, which at one time was under the spiritual guidance of the Rev. Peter Muhlenberg, the "fighting parson" of Woodstock, Va. The fourth and present edifice was erected in 1914.

Other predecessors of the Rev. Mr. Beatty, include the Revs. Samuel D. Finckel, D. D., J. J. Suman, George A. Nixdorf, Stanley Billheimer, David Bittle Floyd, George D. Clark, Dr. Wickey, and William H. Hilbish.

Native of North Carolina, the Rev. Mr. Beatty was educated at Roanoke College, Salem, Va., and the Lutheran Southern Seminary, Charleston, S. C. His first pastorate following ordination was in Wilmington, N. C. He came here in 1927.

Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS
"MY HOPE IS BUILT ON NOTHING LESS"
Rev. Edward Mote
"My hope is built on nothing less
Than Jesus' blood and righteousness
I dare not trust the sweetest frame,
But wholly lean on Jesus' name."
Chorus:
"On Christ the Solid Rock, I stand;
All other ground is sinking sand."
"The author of this hymn, the Rev. Edward Mote, London, England, before entering the ministry in 1852, was employed as a cabinet maker. Walking to work one morning, in 1818, after his conversion from a godless youth, he decided to write a hymn on the gracious experiences of a Christian. Before the day ended the chorus and four verses were completed.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Bewildered by Suffering, Girl Who Loves Hopelessly Asks How Long "This Constant Pain" Will Last

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I love a man who doesn't love me any more and so I am faced with the problem of forgetting him. I am not asking how to forget, as I know that time will take care of it. But I would like to know how long it will take. I love him so much that life without him seems utterly pointless and yet I have to keep on—for awhile, anyway. But I am so unhappy that it doesn't seem that I can.

I follow the advice you have given to others, namely, to go out, have dates and do things, but one has to come home again eventually. And, anyway, the thought of him is always with me. We're still friends but we can never be anything more, as he loves somebody else. I know that worse things than this have happened to others, but I am so completely wretched that I am bewildered. I wonder if you, or any of your readers (to whom the same thing has happened), can tell me how soon I will begin to recover from this constant pain. Sincerely,

ANONYMOUS.

DEAR ANONYMOUS: Offhand, it seems a trifle absurd for one person to attempt to tell another how soon his heartbreak will begin to ease, since the speed of individual recovery from this psychic malady depends so largely upon (a) the temperament of the afflicted individual, and (b) upon his opportunities for leading an active, absorbing social life. The two readiest remedies for heartbreak are (1) a new love, the most effective cure for the youngster, and (2) hard work, an equally effective cure for the more mature person.

The scars of some cases of heartbreak last a lifetime, of course, but even in those instances where the wound has gone deepest and has seemed well-nigh mortal at the time the blow fell, the patient usually is showing marked evidences of recovery at the end of the second year—providing he is 100 per cent committed to the proposition of recovering. By that time, life for him, has resumed "business as usual." The memory of bereavement has lost the power to really hurt. What took place is thereafter recollected, if at all, more in a mood of "sweet sorrow," than in a mood of inconsolable anguish. Incidentally, in order to get a person out of conscious mind, it is absolutely imperative that one keep him out of sight. It is virtually impossible to "forget"—when forget one must—if one continues, in hopeless self-indulgence, to associate with one's "lost love" on a friendly basis. M. H.

How Win Friendship Of High School Boy?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 16 years old. This is my problem: I am rather attracted to a boy who goes to the same high school. We have never met. At present, he is not going with any particular girl, but he does "date." Here is what I would like to know—should I secure an introduction through one of our mutual friends? If so, what should I do after that? I feel that many others girls my age are facing the same problem. They would like to know a certain boy, but they don't want to take the role of "pursuer."

UNCERTAIN.

Break the Ice With Casual Approach

DEAR UNCERTAIN: Boys and girls attending the same school are not required to stand on ceremony in the matter of speaking to each other. They speak to each other as a matter of course, if they find themselves within speaking distance and the spirit moves one or the other to speak. They may exchange smiles or nods or a conventional greeting as they pass in a corridor, or sit next each other in class, or approach the drinking fountain at the same minute, etc., with no offense to propriety and no sacrifice of good manners.

Instead of asking someone to present the boy, it would be better, in my opinion, for you to bide your time and seize on some plausible opportunity for making conversation with him. If he reciprocates your interest, he will accept the opening gratefully and would much prefer it, I think, to being hustled forward by some obliging go-between. The latter procedure would make him feel rather "on the spot," either to make good because he liked you, or to make a getaway because he wasn't interested.

As for what to do once the ice has been broken—that depends upon what sort of encouragement he gives you, and also, upon what sort of social life you lead. If he reacts cordially, and if you have informal parties, you could ask him to your home, with three or four others, for Sunday supper or games or dancing, etc. Of if you have beaux, you might ask one of your beaux to bring this fellow along as a "double date" beau for one of your girl friends. Or you could arrange for one of your girl friends to have one of her beaux ask him if he would like to go here or there with you, on a "double date."

Don't make a direct play for him. Your attitude should imply that, having met him, you rather like him, and so would be pleased to include him in your inner circle of friends. If you have no inner circle of friends, no close girl friends and no best boy friends, there's nothing much you can do beyond showing a consistently friendly attitude in passing. If this doesn't inspire him to seek your society, then your quest is probably hopeless. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Bangs Have Returned to Favor

More than one of Washington's outstanding glamour girls have taken to bangs this season, proving that this is not a style of coiffure to be lightly brushed aside. Here is the newest arrangement of bangs, feather sheared and waved to curve with the line of brows by Emile Beauvais, Washington coiffure stylist. The hair is brushed smoothly behind the ears and curled into two soft rolls atop, which sprout silver laurel leaves, the final fillip to this demure evening headdress

New Yorkers Losing Interest In the Strip-Tease, With Best Exponents of Old Art Out of Town

New York, Oct. 13.

EVER ALLERGIC to the great moral frenzies which occasionally sweep this wickedest of cities, I am always pleased to be able to report any progress we make toward the light of better things, and the gradual decay of the tiniest trifle which would bring the blush of shame to the cheek of even the most dissipated grandmother.

ALICE HUGHES

The last year has seen an almost complete lack of interest in that quaint, depressing folk-way which became known shamelessly all over the country as "the strip-tease"—which consisted of an attractive young lady swiveling around a darkened stage to the tune of a waltz, discarding stray bits of apparel as she ambled. Something over a year ago this esthetic development was widely exposed and roundly denounced here, and our alert Robert Moss ordered more clothing or no business whatever. Since then the art has been visible in some of its madder forms in various cultural exhibits at our World's Fair, but its chief practioners no longer make the first pages.

For instance, the beautiful and justly famed Gypsy Rose Lee is at the moment out of the local scene. She was promoted to a "Follies" and then to Hollywood, where as Louise Hovick, her real name, she had a brief film career. Outside of hearing a report that all was not too well with her domestically—she is Mrs. Muzzy at home—the Gyps front is strangely quiet. A loss, too, for she is a beautiful and interesting girl, who was taken up momentarily by the local chapter of "town wits" as a lovely novelty.

Other famous artists, and beautiful ones, such as Ann Corio, Hinda Wassau and June St. Clair, are not on the local horizon at present. In fact, New York doesn't seem to be much interested, esthetically, in the "strip-tease" any more. But I've lived here long enough to know that something else will happen.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: Wonderful how a measure of success will change the personality and even the person of a girl. Some years ago I worked at one of the great stores here with a girl named Margaretta Byers, as shy and retiring a youngster as you could find in a day's hunt. Some of the girls used to call her "the ghost of a ghost." Then she authored a book called "Designing Women," in the years between. It sold. She was called on for public appearances—things which would have sent her shrieking into the coal cellar some years back. Only the other day I saw her at Muriel King's cocktail hour fashion show. There was the new Margaretta alive, gay, in the center of things and complete mistress of the situation. It was a wondrous personality change. I suppose the answer is that we should all try a little success on our old bazooka. And immediately another answer comes back—how?

Our need for more gay musical shows in times of stress is being answered nobly by "Du Barry Was a Lady," with music by Cole Porter, who wrote his way into tune heaven years ago with "Night and Day," which still makes me cry, the old sissy. The new show will co-star Bert Lahr, whose tender-hearted lion in "The Wizard of Oz" was so swell, and Ethel Merman, still the top shouter of lively songs in the Nation. That'll be some fun, hey, kids?

This will remind you of Ring Lardner's great short story, "Some Like Them Hot." But this is true. One of the real dream boys of our midtown is a traffic cop whose name is Bob Devine. I hear that several "society" gals have big crushes on him. He is said to be studying law at night, and to be a former West Pointer. He's certainly a handsome one, all right. Everything can happen in New York, and always does.

THE SWANK SET, and others of us, too, have been jamming a great Fifth avenue store for a sale of inexpensive gew-gaws, the proceeds of which go to Mme. Chiang Kai-shek's China relief fund. All the trinkets are replicas of famous and costly Chinese art. This is the pet charity of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, jr.'s, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, better known as "Princess Alice." The baubles sold fast, and made a lot of money for the charity.

Teach Yourself The Conga

A DANCE you don't want to miss—the popular Conga!

And how you dazzle your crowd if you're the first to step out to its gay Cuban rhythm.

The Conga you do in "native" style, with relaxed knees and swaying hips to a 1-2-3-4 rhythem. Remember to take short steps with feet flat on the floor.

It's easy—and lots of fun—to do the basic Conga step. 1—Step forward on left foot, swaying hips to the left. 2—Step forward on the right foot, swaying hips to the right. 3—Step forward on left foot, swaying hips to the left. 4—Kick right foot forward in short staccato movement, crossing over left. (This little kick you make from the knee, with foot close to the floor.)

Just as easy to do a tricky Conga variation, when you have diagrams showing you just where to place your feet, how to keep time to the music.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Corsetieres Plugging For Calisthenics; Get Out Your Wand

FOR THE FIRST time in their long careers of catering to the whims of the daughters of Eve, the corsetieres are plugging for calisthenics. Along with the 1939 model waistline minimizers goes sound advice to prune your waist as quickly as possible with exercise.

For all the loose talk about figures being right back where they were in the elegant eighty's, we are still on the streamline standard. The New York mannequins who introduced the new fall fashions—corsets included—were the slimmest waisted that could be found. Before they even donned corsets their waists measured from 10 to 13 inches less than their busts!

You can see that the styles are far from being the same as in the eighties, when formidable garments of stout cloth, whale-bone and laces kept a lady's midriff down to 18 inches by the compression method.

Get Out Your Wand

Alice Cromwell, designer for one of the large manufacturing companies, declares that women today would not wear anything that made them so uncomfortable. The most you can squeeze off your waist and still get your breath is 3 inches—and that might call for the smelling salts!

Stretching, twisting and bending are the perfect combination for waistline slimming. If you are willing to work you can take 2 inches off your waist. That's better than trying to hold it in! Get out your wand—the old reliable, sawed-off broomhandle—for this series.

Don't Slump In Exercising

Sit on a chair with the wand back of the shoulders and with the legs wide apart. Twist to the right and try to lower the trunk until the end of the wand touches the knee. Sit erect, and twist to the left trying to touch the end of the wand held by the right hand to the left knee.

Wind up with this one: Sit on the floor with the legs together and straight out in front. Stretch the wand high overhead as you pull up with all the trunk muscles. Then, holding this upward stretch, bend over to one side and try to place the wand on the floor parallel with the legs. It is more important that you pull up with all your muscles and bend only at the waist than it is to place the wand on the floor! Don't slump in any of these exercises.

Coeds Taught Correct Posture

Austin, Tex. (AP).—They go in for princesses on a wholesale basis at the University of Texas.

The right to the title is earned in the university's $500,000 physical education plant.

Two thousand girls compete each year for the honor of being named "princess of posture." Nine are chosen.

Only 5 per cent of the girl students have good postures when they enroll in the University of Texas, says Miss Anna Hiss, director of physical education. Therefore the university emphasizes the development of correct posture in its physical education courses and stages the contest as an added incentive to co-eds.

Ninety-five per cent of the girls have co-ed slump. This is a mild sort of S-shape that tightens a girl's knees, curves her shoulders and throws her head forward. Her feet toe in or out and she steps in a slightly stiff manner.

Best Winter Coiffure Styles Given by Emile

Period Look Urged On Young Moderns By Capital Expert

The Post Fashion Editor.

WHAT PLANS have you for your winter coiffure? Will it be just a repetition of last season's arrangement or a wave designed especially for your new gowns and hats? If you haven't succumbed to a new hair-do yet, then heed the suggestions advanced by Emile Beauvais, sr., and jr., Washington hair stylists, both of whom agree on the correct silhouettes to watch, yet both having derived their inspiration from different sources—the elder from New York, the dapper younger Emile directly from the continent.

Marshall Adams

Emile, sr., fresh from a meeting in New York of the Coiffure Guild proposes the "period" look for soignee young moderns. He predicts that the influence of back bustling dressses and front bustling curls will continue through fall into winter.

The "Cascade Silhouette," a series of soft curls and forehead fringes of bangs, was selected by the Coiffure Guilds style committee as the number one influence, according to the elder Emile. The side hair of this 1880 period cascade should be worn high but not strained and should show that "Kissable Spot" at the nape of the neck. The possibility of varying this cascade effect to suit individual features should do away with the carbon copy look most women acquired last winter as a result of upped hair-dos.

Pompadours Are Smart

For statistician fiends—the line in general is upward, softened by waves and curls, the length of hair at the sides being from 4 to 6 inches, back hair no more than 3 to 4 inches and front hair from 3 to 3½ inches long. The 1900 pompadours are smart, too, with softly waved front puffs of hair giving a slimming, aristocratic look to the older woman's face.

The deb or collegian, unlike her "1900" mother, may adventure into a revival of the page boy silhouette. It is proving popular with the younger crowd once more. However, now the side hair is not permitted to hang dank and loose. It is pinioned up and away from the ears, ending in curls on top, held by a beret or ribbon, the back hair curling under and remaining long. Evening coiffures for the junior miss may be crowning glories of bows, combs, ostrich or flowers.

Emile, jr., adds these two coiffure ideas picked up during his recent visit abroad.

The Back Side Swirl

First, for the handsome matron who dares nothing by daring all—a back side swirl which fits so close it sculptures the head, ending in a soft topknot of curls. Or a long strand of back hair, shaped to the side, held there with an invisible comb, and waved forward with the natural hair line at ear and forehead showing.

Emile the younger noted that many smart continentals have chosen bangs, but only those with high foreheads have elected them for daily wear—those with low, square foreheads fighting their desire to wear them like the plague. A girl with a versatile young face like Peggy Townsend, local debutante who has just adopted the bang, was cited by Emile as one of the few who can wear a bang straight across the brow. Most features, he stated, are not harmonious enough for this, therefore a fringe of hair should be curved to the natural line of forehead and the natural arch of the brow.

Not an influence to get worried about, but still interesting, was this beauty affectation noted by Emile, jr., in Biskra, Algeria, last month just before returning to this country. He observed that until sixteen, the raven-haired Algerians are permitted to go about with unveiled heads which are packed with a deep Titian mud bath dye. Oddly enough, these girls' brilliant charcoal-coated black eyes are their only other beauty conceit, save their use of henna dye for the soles of their bare feet.

Game Rooms Now Suggest Ideas For Fun in Home

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

There can't be so terribly much wrong with the younger generation as long as table tennis, radio, bridge, amateur movies and other stay-at-home amusements continue to engross their interest. American parents know this plenty well—that's why game rooms and home gyms are engaging their attention when family entertainment is up for discussion. Right now, as the porch and lawn are getting out of season, game rooms are coming in. We've seen several grand ones that suggest ideas for plain and fancy fun.

One of the gayest belongs to a couple who have literally built their house with their own hands. They hired the outside walls and the roof built over their heads and moved in, finishing the rest themselves and learning as they went along. Adding a room with each baby and each raise. Just this summer they've finished an attic playroom with compoboard walls. The floors they painted in great checkerboard squares in black and red, then cut out and painted big plyboard disks, made shuffle board pushers, and there they have a big-time floor-size checker game whenever anybody wants to play.

The Doomsday Dowagers

"Did you ever see anything like the way prices are going up?"

"Never! If this keeps on, we'll simply get rickets and scurvy and everything. Do you know how much I had to pay today for porterhouse steak? Forty cents!"

"Yes, and I had to pay 60 cents for liver! Why, I can remember when we fed it to the cat."

"Well, I had counted on having filet mignon for my luncheon Tuesday, but I think I'll just have to have squab. And I WISH you'd see what they're asking for artichokes!"

"I know! And avocados! And Brussels sprouts! And broccoli!"

"Yes, and honeydew melon!"

"Well, I just don't know what the country's coming to!"

"Horace says things are going to get a lot worse."

"So does Arthur. Well—you know silk stockings are going up."

"Yes, and all kinds of clothes. I guess we're going to have to go naked as well as hungry. Mink's already out of sight."

"I'm certainly glad I got my foxes last spring."

"Still, you can't go around wearing nothing but a silver fox scarf. You know, the Government ought to do something."

"The trouble is this country's being run by a bunch of crackpots."

"There's too much Government in business."

"Yes, and another thing, people don't know the value of a dollar any more. Look at the things they buy—radios and automobiles, and electric refrigerators and fur coats. They just have to have everything."

"Well, where are they going to get the money to pay for these things?"

"Nobody pays their bills any more."

"Another thing—you can't get decent help. People don't want to work. They'd rather be on relief."

"We're going to have to close the house this fall and move into a hotel."

"That's no life."

"I know it, but we can't sit there and starve."

"Well, I don't know where it's all going to lead to."

"Horace says 'most anything's likely to happen. That's why he bought that ranch in Arizona."

"Well, of course, if the worst comes, we have that lodge in the Adirondacks."

"Still, you couldn't stay there in winter."

"Well, of course, we have that little place down in Florida."

"Horace is seriously thinking of getting a yacht—to be on the safe side."

"A lot of our friends are buying islands—but of course they're going out of sight now, too."

"Well, it just seems a shame that we have to be driven out of our own country—onto yachts and islands—when our people have been here for centuries. Why, mine fought in the first Indian wars!"

"Mine had a direct grant from the English King."

"Well, I suppose we just have to be philosophical and—if the worst comes, make the best of it . . . Where are you going now?"

"I want to look at evening wraps. My old ermine's in shreds."

"My chinchilla's in rags, but I don't want to get anything just yet. Arthur's promised me some sables—if the stock market rises."

Service Parties Hold The Social Spotlight

Major General and Mrs. Schley Give Tea for Officers Stationed Nearby; Mrs. Fries Has Country Club Luncheon

By Elizabeth Henney

Service parties held the spotlight on Washington's social stage yesterday, with three Army events heading the list. The Chief of Engineers, Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schley, and Mrs. Schley, entertained for the active officers of the corps stationed in Washington and at Fort Belvoir, Va.

From 4:30 to 6:30 in the afternoon, Gen. and Mrs. Schley received in the drawing room of their home on Hoban road, and over 350 guests called in.

Mrs. Schley was gowned in a floor length model, fashioned with an oxford gray crepe skirt, a draped bodice of lipstick red and girdling her waist was a wide belt of light gray. With this she wore a diamond and ruby brooch, and heavy silver bangle bracelets.

Throughout the house a color scheme of red and white was followed, those being the colors of the Engineer Corps. The tea table was centered with a low bowl of red, single chrysanthemums, and at the corners of the table stood tall, white tapers in silver candelabra.

Assisting generally during the afternoon were Mrs. Wilhelm D. Styer and Mrs. William A. Snow. Alternating at the tea table were Mrs. John J. Kingman, wife of the Assistant Chief of Engineers, Brig. Gen. Kingman; Mrs. James O'Connor, Mrs. Robert S. Thomas, Mrs. Creswell Garlington, Mrs. Roscoe C. Crawford, Mrs. Raymond A. Wheeler, Mrs. Ludson D. Worsham and Mrs. Earl E. Gesler.

Through the drawing room, dining room, den and downstairs into the heavily beamed recreation room wandered the guests, gathering into groups here and there, and into a thick mass at the dining room. Mrs. Styer, passing sandwiches, looked especially chic in a trim black outfit, fashioned shirtwaist style, with interesting gold buttons marching down the front to the waistline. Mrs. Kingman, smartly gowned in black, topped her outfit with silver fox furs. Her daughter, Miss Jean Kingman, and Miss Nancy Crawford, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Roscoe C. Crawford, were a fashionable twosome in black with pearl accents and small, veiled hats.

Son and Wife Are With the McCoaches

The Engineer Commissioner David McCoach, jr., and Mrs. McCoach, were accompanied by their son and daughter-in-law, Lieut. and Mrs. David McCoach 3d, who are now stationed at Fort Belvoir. Mrs. McCoach, jr., was gowned in plum color with accessories to match, and her daughter-in-law looked very Russian with a short cafe-au-lait jacket over her black frock, and a Cossack shako to match her jacket.

Noted during the afternoon were Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Col. J. W. N. Schulz, Col. Stuart C. Godfrey, Maj. and Mrs. Albert L. Lane, Capt. and Mrs. David Ogden, Capt. James G. Christiansen, Capt. and Mrs. Fabius H. Kohloss, Capt. and Mrs. John L. Person, Capt. and Mrs. Howard Ker, Capt. and Mrs. Joseph S. Gorlinski, Capt. Miles Reber, Capt. and Mrs. Miles Dawson, Lieut. Col. and Mrs. George Mayo, Capt. and Mrs. Herbert D. Vogel and many, many more.

Mrs. Amos Fries Has Luncheon

Earlier in the day, Mrs. Amos A. Fries, wife of Maj. Gen. Fries, entertained at luncheon at the Army, Navy Country Club for a number of out-of-town guests who are in Washington this week. The hostess, who received the guests in the main lounge, was gowned in a jacket frock of crushed grape, shade with accessories of brown and a kolinsky stole.

Guests were seated at a long table in the large new sunparlor of the club. They included Mrs. Robert S. Crump, of Richmond, Va.; Mrs. Walter R. Reed, of Washington; Mrs. Thomas J. Harkins, Asheville, N. C.; Mrs. William S. McCrea, of Spokane, Wash.; Mrs. Louis G. Clarke, of Portland, Oreg.; Mrs. Sanford G. Donaldson, of Yanktown, S. Dak.; Mrs. S. Williams, of Little Rock, Ark., and Mrs. Walter C. Temple, of Dallas, Tex.

Also, Mrs. Luther Smith, of Hattiesburg, Miss.; Mrs. William Koch, of Des Moines, Iowa; Mrs. Cyrus Coombs, Mrs. F. Gowland and the hostess' three daughters, Mrs. Theodore Pierson, Mrs. Frederic A. Henney and Miss Carol Fries.

Also entertaining at luncheon at the Country Club yesterday was Mrs. Joseph F. Battley, wife of Capt. Battley, of the Chemical Warfare Service. Her guests included Mrs. Charles R. Alley, wife of Col. Alley; Mrs. Paul X. English, wife of Col. English, and her house guest, Mrs. Harry R. Lebkicher, and Mrs. Fred A. McMahon, of Cincinnati, Ohio, wife of Maj. McMahon.

Maj. Lebkicher and Maj. McMahon are in town with a group of officers called here this week by the Army for a planning conference. On Thursday Mrs. Walter C. Baker, wife of Maj. Gen. Baker, chief of the Chemical Warfare Service, entertained for the wives of the officers who came for the conference. The entire group were honored at a buffet supper on Wednesday by Col. and Mrs. English, and last Monday Maj. and Mrs. George F. Unmacht entertained for the visitors.

Deb Arrives Here Soon

Miss Dita Davis, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Robert Davis, of Brentwood Park, California, will arrive in Washington the end of this month with her parents. She will be presented to society on November 29. Miss Davis has attended Miss Eastman's School for Girls as well as the Rumson School. She is artistic to her fingertips. Not only does the debutante have hopes of becoming a real pianist but still takes an active interest in dancing, which she studied at Fanchon Marco's school. The Davis family expect to spend the winter here. Another daughter, Mrs. Raymond Soderberg, makes her home in Falls Church. Miss Davis is the great great granddaughter of Count Paul Kowalewski of Poland. On her father's side the deb is the great granddaughter of A. P. Gould of Maine

Olivia Stokes' Wedding Today

Miss Olivia Egleston Phelps Stokes and John Davis Hatch, jr., who will be married today at Lenox, Mass., were honored at a large dinner, followed by dancing, last evening at the Lenox Club.

Their wedding will take place at 12:30 p. m. at Trinity Episcopal Church and will be followed by a breakfast at Brook Farm, the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes, parents of the bride. Miss Stokes will have as her maid of honor Miss Audrey Maynard, of Jericho, Long Island, and two of her godchildren, Robert Monks, son of the Rev. and Mrs. Gardner Monks, of the Lenox School, and Carol Olive, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Olive, of Foxcroft School, will serve as page and flower girl.

Thomas LaFarge, of Mount Carmel, Conn., will be best man and ushers will be Charles H. Sawyer, director of the Addison Gallery of Andover, Mass.; Winslow Ames, director of the Lyman Allen Museum, New London, Conn., Dr. J. Lawrence Pool, of New York, Gerhard P. van Arkel, of Washington, and Thomas P. Blagden, of the Hotchkiss School, Lakesville, Conn.

Party Honors Mme Rucquoi

Mrs. Alfred Lawton and Mrs. Carlton Pierce, 3d, daughters of Senator and Mrs. Ellison D. Smith, and Mrs. Fraley Smith, daughter-in-law, were co-hostesses at a luncheon yesterday at the Wardman Park Hotel, in honor of Mme. Leon Rucquoi, of Brussels, who is visiting in this country with her family. They are the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Pierce and will be in Washington for about a week. Mme. Rucquoi is the sister of Mr. Pierce and was Miss Dorothy Pierce, of Hinsdale, Mass., before her marriage.

Attending the luncheon were Mrs. South Trimble, jr., Mrs. Oscar Cox, Mrs. Lambert Jones, Mrs. Annie May McGowan, Mrs. John Stevens, Mrs. E. B. Wilson, Mrs. Robert G. Thach and Miss Silvine Clagett.

Mrs. Hull Hostess To Home-Town Postmaster's Wife

Mrs. Cordell Hull, wife of the Secretary of State, entertained Mrs. Jere Gardenhire at luncheon yesterday at the Little Tea House in Arlington. Earlier in the day Mrs. Hull took her guest on a tour through Mount Vernon and in the afternoon they visited the State Department.

Mrs. Gardenhire is the wife of the postmaster at Carthage, Tenn., (the home town of Secretary Hull) and with her husband is here for the postmasters' convention this week. Secretary and Mrs. Hull entertained Postmaster and Mrs. Gardenhire at dinner in the Carlton last evening. Mrs. Gardenhire was one of the women received by Mrs. Roosevelt on Thursday afternoon at the White House.

First Lady Declares Fear Factor in World's Ills

Tells B'nai B'rith Lodge Auxiliary That It Should Be Kept Out of Our Country With Jealous Concern for Rights of All

By Jessie Ash Arndt.
The Post Club Editor.

Fear is responsible for much that has grown up in the world, and it should be kept out of our country by jealous concern for the rights of all, Mrs. Roosevelt yesterday told members of the Women's Auxiliary to Argo Lodge, B'nai Brith at their first anniversary luncheon. More than 1,100 members and guests attended the affair which was held in the ballroom of the Willard Hotel, with Henry Monsky, of Omaha, president of B'nai B'rith, also a guest speaker.

"Deeply concerned for the troubled world, we wonder how the civilization, which we had a hand in building, could produce certain results," said Mrs. Roosevelt. "We are anxious, in our own country, that no things of the kind shall happen. We hope and pray for peace, and we must work in our country to correct causes, if we can discover them, that have brought out such results in other countries.

"We must study our own democracy, not as a democracy for a few but for everybody; where everybody is free and everybody is jealous for the rights of all; not just for his own interests, but for those of the whole."

Privileges Bring Added Responsibility

She decried the attitude of "the limited group of privileged young people of this country who have opportunity to go to school and college and then get work through the influence of their families."

"They accept it blandly," said Mrs. Roosevelt, "and do not seem to realize that added responsibility goes with it. . . . I hope that someday there will be none of the young privileged group that will not understand the problems of the Nation as a whole.

"We have a responsibility for helping the world as a whole, and we must make ourselves worthy; make the country a true democracy, take our share of responsibility and think of our people and what they need to make a really successful democracy in the United States.

Mrs. Roosevelt commended the auxiliary for its accomplishments during the single year of its existence, for its interest in the Self-Help Exchange and other civic projects, and declared it should be an example to other organizations. Its membership is now 700.

Auxiliary Gives $500 to Hillel

Mr. Monsky, who spoke briefly preceding Mrs. Roosevelt, was presented with a check for $500 by Mrs. Morris Gewirz, retiring president of the auxiliary, for the B'nai B'rith Hillel extension work at the University of Maryland. This amount represented half of the auxiliary's pledge to the work.

B'nai B'rith was founded 95 years ago "to units Israelites in the promotion of their highest interests and those of humanity." It has founded and supports philanthropic and benevolent institutions, and maintains cultural and religious institutions for Jewish youth at colleges and universities.

Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith presided at the luncheon, introducing Mrs. Roosevelt, and Mrs. Maurice Bisgyer offered the opening prayer, a petition for those who suffered in other lands and for peace here.

New officers, who were installed by Mr. Monsky following the program, included: President, Mrs. Herman W. Hertzberg; first vice president, Mrs. Fred Pelzman; second vice president, Mrs. Isadore Kahn; third vice president, Mrs. Shimon Janus; treasurer, Mrs. Morris Bildman; recording secretary, Mrs. Jack Blau; financial secretary, Mrs. Herman Eisenberg; assistant financial secretary, Mrs. Ned Bord; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Samuel Dessoff; assistant corresponding secretary, Mrs. Harry Douglas; auditors, Mrs. Mark Plavnick and Mrs. Maurice Bernstein; historian, Mrs. Lawrence Koenigsberger; parliamentarian, Mrs. Leonard Schloss.

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., honorary president of the auxiliary, was out of town and unable to be present.

Mrs. Goldsmith was chairman of the luncheon committee. Her co-chairmen were: Program, Mrs. Maurice Bisgyer; tickets, Mrs. Samuel Dessoff and Mrs. Jack Blau; financial, Mrs. Maurice Bildman and Mrs. Herman Eisenberg; hostesses, Mrs. Milton Strasburger, Mrs. Edward Cafritz and Mrs. Maurice Solomon.

Proctor Asks D. C. for New Courthouse

Crowded Condition Of Present One Is 'Deplorable,' He Says At Bar Meeting

Denouncing the "deplorable" condition of the District Court Building, Justice James M. Proctor last night urged more than 300 District Bar Association members to back construction of a new courthouse. He also recommended separate legal machinery to handle domestic relations cases, at a meeting in the Mayflower.

Due to crowded conditions in the court building, Justice Proctor said, court personnel find it virtually impossible to perform their duties, rendering impossible the speedy handling of trials.

There is no place for lawyers to confer with clients and witnesses, and only poor jury facilities, he said, pointing out also that the court building lacks proper sanitation facilities.

"Worse Every Day"

"We must get a new courthouse. If something isn't done soon, conditions will become positively intolerable. Things are getting worse every day," Proctor declared.

The jurist urged full co-operation of the bar association in his proposal for a separate legal agency ously taxes work of judges in the motions branch, Proctor declared.

The number of these cases, which require a great amount of investigative work, has grown "immensely" in recent years, and seriously tax work fo judges in the motions branch, Proctor declared.

Challenges Lawyers

"Children, the innocent victims of broken families, must be protected," he said. "This is a challenge to District lawyers."

Members appro. l a resolution to liberalize the District's "archaic" corporation law which has caused 90 per cent of Washington corporations to incorporate in other States. More than $1,000,000 was diverted from the District annually, it was said.

The association's report proposed creation of commissioner of corporations in the reorganized District set-up who would have charge of liberalization of present stringent corporation regulations in a "modernized" law.

Corporation Counsel Seal has recommended the inclusion of the new office in the reorganization program, which is to be presented to Congress in January.

Appeal Approved

With a unanimous vote the lawyers approved a resolution of the committee on unlawful practice to carry to the Supreme Court the 2-1 decision of the Court of Appeals holding legal trust, tax, and estate services by banks, in the contest with the American Security & Trust Co.

Commanding the resolution for the writ of certiorari, one member, Levi David, declared it an "outrage" that three judges were absent from the bench at the time of the decision.

A legal institute to discuss the "Subject of Practice and Procedure Before Administrative Tribunals," with reading of papers on functions of Federal agencies in their relation to legal practice, will commence November 13 with a discussion of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Agreeing with District traffic heads that the award tag should go only to drivers who demonstrate their qualifications by unusual, attention-attracting acts of courtsy or caution, Jess Willard, general manager of WJSV, ordered the first presentation program postponed until such drivers are located.

The "safe driver" hunt with Policeman Patton started from police headquarters. Near Second and F streets northeast, the police car came to a jolting halt when a woman backed her auto from an alley into the center of the street. Brakes squealed as a long line of traffic behind came to a sudden stop. The woman smiled sweetly as Patton delivered a polite lecture on traffic regulations and then decided she didn't want to go that way anyhow and drove back into the alley.

A few blocks farther, Patton stopped for a stop sign at H street. A car sped from beneath the railroad viaduct and the police cruiser started in pursuit. The chase led at 40 miles-an-hour until the driver ahead spotted Patton's uniform. He was handed a ticket.

The search continued. Patton and his passenger kept a sharp lookout for prospective award candidates. There wasn't much traffic on Taft Bridge when the searchers arrived, but approaching from the Calvert street side was a car straddling the center line.

"Guess I must have been talking and didn't see what I was doing," said the offending driver when he was finally stopped several blocks down Connecticut avenue. He'll go to court this morning.

Out at Chevy Chase Circle an hour later, the search was still on. A light delivery truck driver almost became the first candidate. Twice he stopped to yield the right-of-way to pedestrians.

But on a straight stretch of Rittenhouse street, he couldn't resist "stepping on it" and Patton gave him a ticket.

Three more speeders were apprehended within an hour. A driver "just didn't see" a stop sign coming into Wisconsin avenue and forced a bus to swerve across the car tracks to avoid a collision.

Downtown, drivers passing busy intersections had little time to wait for pedestrians. And even the pedestrians scorned common rules.

"Gosh," said Patton at the end of the day, "what are you going to do with all those award tags?"

Daredevil Pays for Tweaking Nose of Grim Reaper on Friday, 13th

One thrill that wasn't on the program was George Dockstader's aerial flight (left). Center—Clown cowboys, Pewee and Bill Rogers, convince Police Inspector Kelly that their artillery is discharging only blanks. Right—High-stepper was Edna Mae Marsh, of Fort Stevens Legion Post

A gang of daredevils who make their living cheating death last night tweaked the nose of the Grim Reaper, laughted up their sleeves, and almost got away with it.

Five times the 5,000 spectators at Griffith Stadium watched spellbound as George Dockstader, 30-year-old Hollywood stuntman, dodged between Death and Mr. Friday (the Thirteenth) Jinx. And the sixth time—as he was motorcycling into a brick wall—they saw him get hurt. Hurled 25 feet through the air when the machine crashed, Dockstader made an unscheduled landing on his back, injuring his spine. He was rushed to Garfield Hospital, his condition undetermined.

Luckier than his brother was Don Gary, who was supposed to crash his car head on with another. But the auto failed to function, and instead crazily rammed the grandstand wall, shattering both wall and auto.

The "Cavalcade of Thrills" provided another unexpected piece of excitement when a wild steer threw his rider and lunged madly at a cluster of newspapermen, photographers and officials.

In unison, newspapermen, photographers, and officials hurled themselves face first over the nearest grandstand fences. (This reporter is proud to report he did not jump as the others did, face first. His was a dignified flying eagle.)

But the schedule produced its share of fun, folks. And it wasn't the cool night air alone that induced a case of chills. There was Dockstader on his motorcycle, soaring through burning board walls and hoops of fire, leaping over nine barrels and hopping over two automobiles placed side by side before disaster caught up with him at the foot-thick brick wall. There was "Ironman" Gary using his helmeted head as a battering ram as a speeding automobile charged into a wooden wall; and Ula Holt driving her machine through flaming timbers; and Rex Rekir hurtling his car over barricades, turning it turtle at high speeds, and smashing it through a brick-wall, unscathed in the shower of bricks.

The "Flying Kimris" literally held on to life with their teeth as they twisted and twirled on the trapeze 100 feet in the air with no net below. And the bronco busters were mighty lucky they didn't get "busted up" themselves.

Anything could happen; almost everything did. George Cook and his telephone-equipped Ford, for instance. The contraption spurted flame and spouted water; it shed doors and vital parts; it bucked like a Brahma steer, whisked around like a boomerang, and left the field in a thunder of explosions.

Two of the boys just weren't getting their share of the fun, though. "Brahma Bill" Rogers, of Texas, who suffered two fractured legs, a fractured thigh, and other such stuff in his last tussle with a tough bronco, was good and sore when the cameraman made him pose while the rest of the cowpunchers were out there roping 'em. And Bill's pal and senior, "Spike" Tinley, four-feet three-inches of Wild West, was peeved too when "they" wouldn't let him roughride one of those long-horned "critters."

Opening of the big performance resembled a Zouave convention as solar-spangled Fort Steven Post Drum and Bugle Corps, James Reese Europe Post Drum and Bugle Crops, Sons of the Legion Drum and Bugle Corps, Elks Club Band, Colored Elks Band, Metropolitan Boys Club Band, and an American Legion guard of honor drummed and blared and marched across the field.

Two more shows today, matinee and evening, will repeat some of the aforementioned eye-poppers, but anything can happen when you're playing with fire—and death. And it's all for a good cause, the welfare fund of the Variety Club.

Propaganda Defense Lags, Kiwanis Told

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 13—Bennett O. Knudson, of Albert Lea, Minn., president of Kiwanis International, told the Capital District Kiwanis convention tonight that "democracies have not kept pace with science" in efforts to fend off foreign propaganda.

He urged Kiwanians to undertake the task of "re-selling America to Americans" and pointed to United States educational institutions as dominant factors in reparation of future citizens. At the same time, he criticized schools which "dodge the controversial issues."

"They stay at a safe distance from the matters which perplex most people," he asserted, "and the result has been a certain cynicism about education. It seems unreal to practical people who are concerned with vital questions."

The problem uppermost in United States citizens' minds today, he continued, was neutrality, and the issue "is apparently misunderstood."

Farmer in Dell of Opportunity, Midas of Wheatfields Asserts

Fabulous Tom Campbell, silver-haired evangel of the Government's farm program, breezed out of Washington last night, his mission here accomplished.

Operator of one of the world's largest wheat farms in Hardin, Mont., he just had to come to the Capital to tell Mr. Roosevelt, Secretaries Wallace and Ickes, Librarian of Congress Archibald MacLeish and others that agriculture is really beginning to go places out West.

As this edition goes to press, Campbell is aboard a New York bound train, dreaming about those 376,000 acres of grazing land he and John J. Raskob have just bought in New Mexico to show their confidence in America's future.

"Why, —— —— it, you can't stop this country," fabulous Tom said last night in the course of a Hotel Mayflower interview. (The dashes stand for what you think they do, Mr. Campbell favors strong language.)

"I'm a Republican but I felt so grateful for what this Administration is doing for us farmers I just had to come and tell them. There's 32,000,000 of us and another 20,000,000 who depend on us. Yes, sir, the new farm legislation is the best thing that has happened in years."

Author, inventor, agricultural engineer, former adviser to the Soviet government, cowpuncher—Campbell was more like an enthusiastic sophomore waiting to play in his first game with the varsity as he sang his paean to the farm program.

Six feet tall, broad shouldered, wasp-waisted and bronzed of skin, with a hand grip that would make a boilermaker wince, Campbell could pass for a football player if one overlooked the grey hair. At 57, he is scrappier than ever, especially whenever he hears a crepe hanger saying this country is slipping.

"Never again in your lifetime or mine will we have such business opportunities as we have today," he said. "You ought to go West and see for yourself how much better off the farmers are. Ah, it's wonderful!"

5 Md. Girls Chosen for Pilot-Training Course Expect Thrills Aplenty at the Stick

Marjorie Miller (left), Fort Monroe, Va., and Mary Jane Ferrell, Richmond, Va., two of the Maryland University coeds selected to take the student pilot training course starting Monday, are instructed in the handling of airpla ne controls by Howard Mann

Elaine Danforth, 19, cheerleader, was one of five girls selected by University of Maryland officials to take the student pilot training course, which starts Monday night with the first class in ground instruction.

"I always thought flying was a lot of fun," she said. "I have been up twice, but that's not like actually piloting a plane yourself. I wish we would get a chance to make a parachute jump. That would really be a thrill."

Miss Danforth's enthusiasm was shared by the others in the female corps. They all are looking forward to thrills aplenty when they take the controls for the first time. The other girls are Mary J. Ferrell, Richmond, Va.; Marjorie Miller, Fort Monroe, Va.; Gertrude Plumer, Huntington, Md., and Helen A. Bruns, Baltimore. Miss Danforth is also from Baltimore.

Miss Miller admitted she never had been up, but said she wasn't a bit scared. She said her parents were sort of reluctant to give their consent at first, but they finally yielded to her persuasions. The university regulations require written consent of the students' parents before any of them were permitted to enroll in the course.

The first month of instruction will be devoted entirely to groundwork, with two classes a week. Flight instruction will be given at College Park Airport under supervision of George Brinckerhoff, owner of the field. Each student will receive three half-hour flying lessons a week. Examinations for private pilots' certificates of competency will be given by the Civil Aeronautics Authority to all students on completion of the course.

Maryland's quota of 50 students has been filled. The ground work instructors willl be Lieut. Comdr. G. C. Halpine, U. S. Navy, retired, of Annapolis, and Lieut. George M. Hannah, of the Maryland National Guard, Baltimore.

Planes 'Raid' D.C. Tonight to Test Defenses

Anti-aircraft guns of the 260th Coast Artillery, District National Guard, will go into action with the aid of searchlights shortly after 9 p. m. tonight to defend the National Capital against a "raid" by planes of the 104th National Guard Observation Squadron, Baltimore, Md.

Under command of Lieut. Col. Walter W. Burns, the guns will be fired from emplacements on the Monument Grounds as attacking planes dive from 3,000 feet.

In the first attack the planes, commanded by Capt. Harold R. Bohlman, will dive singly at the guns. The second thrust will be in formation.

Spectators can best observe the mock battle, National Guard officials said yesterday, from the Mall and Monument Grounds.

In the demonstration, flares and Very lights will be dropped as bombs, while 250 men operate the guns and try to "knock out" the planes.

Grosjeans Coming Back to U. S. on Belgian Mission

Word was received in Washington yesterday that Robert Leon Grosjean and his bride, the former Miss Emlen Knight Davies, will return to this country for an extended stay. Grosjean has been appointed to a Belgian government economic mission.

The former Miss Davies, daughter of the United States Ambassador to Belgium, Joseph E. Davies, and Mrs. Emlen Knight Davies, met her husband at Brussels a couple of seasons ago. Their marriage in May of this year was one of the outstanding events of the spring social season. It took place at Oakington, country estate of Mrs. Grosjean's brother-in-law and sister, Senator and Mrs. Tydings, at Havre de Grace, Md.

Mrs. Davies, Mrs. Grosjean's mother, now makes her home in Washington.

New Bridge And Sewer In Prospect

Bids Sought on Piney Branch Drain; Anacostia Span To Be Recommended

Success for two projects long sought by local civic organizations, one a sewer, the other a bridge, appeared in prospect yesterday.

Relief from recurrent floods in the neighborhood of Arkansas avenue and Delafield place seemed imminent when the District Commissioner announced they would advertise for bids for the second section of the Piney Branch storm sewer.

Residents of Washington Highlands were cheered by news Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, had said he would recommend a traffic survey to determine need for a new bridge over the Anacostia river from the foot of South Capitol street to Firth Stirling avenue. The cost of the project has been estimated at $3,000,000.

PWA Approves Sewer

The sewer project, approved by the Public Works Administration, which is financing the work, will cost about $250,000. Bids will be opened November 3. Although not originally a public works project, the commissioners were able to save enough money from other work to assure the construction of the new sewer.

A traffic survey, which is being conducted by Capt. Whitehurst's office in cooperation with the Bureau of Public Roads, is expected to provide a fairly accurate picture o the need of the new Anacostia bridge. Although, Capt. Whitehurst said, it may indicate that a bridge would not be needed for several years at that particular point.

Since the proposed terminals of the bridge would be below the U. S. Navy Yard, the span would have to be built with a high clearance, or probably with a draw, Capt. Whitehurst stated.

Estimated $550,000

Much road improvement would be required on the Anacostia side of the proposed bridge. The closet main thoroughfare at that point is Firth Stirling avenue.

Capt. Whitehurst said he has received architectural plans for the new Massachusetts avenue bridge, and is awaiting engineering plans from the firm of Harrington & Cortelyou, of Kansas City. The consulting architect on the proposed bridge is Louis Justement, of this city.

This span, which will replace the present culvert under Massachusetts avenue in Rock Creek Park, is to cost about $550,000. The highway director said he would advertise the project sometime between November 1 and 15. During the work traffic along Massachusetts avenue will be routed on a detour bridge. Park traffic will continue on the same road. Present plans are to build the bridge around the culvert.

MAN. OH MAN!

Why must we men be slaves to age-old customs?

Are we men or mice?

Do we have to do things just because they were done by our forefathers?

We now ride in automobiles and airplanes instead of buggies and horse-cars.

Let's stand on our own rights.

We mean like taking off our hats in a department store or office building elevator. After all, we don't doff our hats when we enter the store or lobby.

Then why make an issue of an elevator.

And when you do take off your hat, how in the world do you hold it from getting crushed.

A man's hat takes the beating of its life when the crowd starts backing up.

Afterwards it looks like a fisherman's favorite sun hat . . . or as wrinkled as a college man's rain hat.

2 Local Frosh Teams Impressive in Games Here; Hardell Gets Off to Good Start

Shielded by a wall of beefy blockers, Jack Doolan, substitute halfback, raced 15 yards around his own right end midway of the final period to give Georgetown University's freshmen a 6-0 victory over the little Owls of Temple University yesterday at American University.

Balked for three quarters by the Owls' rugged defense of its goal line, the little Hoyas took to the air in the fourth period with an attack that put them into scoring position.

Taking the ball on their own 40 Georgetown began the march to the goal line with a 30-yard pass—from Halfback Al Kull to Chris Povich—and then advanced the ball to the 15 before Doolan turned on a burst of speed to cross the goal. John Barrett, quarterback, missed the try for the extra point when his placement went wide.

Hardell Off to Good Start

It was the little Hoyas' first game of the season and marked their debut under Coach Elmer (Hap) Hardell and his two assistants, Joe Frank and Jim Hill.

Georgetown's bid for a second touchdown was cut short by the whistle with the ball resting on the little Owls' 1-yard line, where they had turned back two thrusts. The little Hoyas had advanced the ball down the field with the Kull-Povich passing combination.

The Little Hoyas were in Temple territory most of the afternoon, and the only time the Little Owls were in scoring position was when McLaughlin's kick was blocked in the second period on Georgetown's 20-yard line. The Hoya line reared up, however, and took the ball away on downs.

Sorce Plays Big Part

Georgetown's great defensive game was led by Ross Sorce, 270 pounds of 6-foot-4 tackle, who played 60 minutes. Sorce was a constant source of irritation to the Temple offense. Mickey Ford, an all-Maryland prep school back last year, stood out with a fine blocking performance.

Doolan, Kull and Barrett led the Little Hoya attack, along with Povich, end.

Every Georgetown man on the freshman squad with exception of Eddie Agnew, halfback, was thrown into the fray by Hardell, former

Colonial Frosh WinOverTerrapins

George Washington University's freshman football team captured its second consecutive victory of the season yesterday, defeating a game but outclassed Maryland yearling eleven, 21 to 6, in a well-played game at College Park.

Maryland lone score came in the first quarter as a result of a Colonial fumble on the kick-off. Kaiserowitz muffed the kick-off and on the third play after the Maryland recovery Baker tossed a short pass to Hal Berry, former Tech star, for the touchdown. The attempted placement went wide of the uprights.

The Colonials came back with a vengeance and went ahead permanently in the same quarter, Goodman's pass to Sam Lefkowitz being good for the score on the heels of an 80-yard march down the field. Snyder's educated toe, which has yet to miss a placement this year, converted.

In the second quarter the Colonial yearlings scored their second touchdown when Don Pinnow, who looks to be George Washington's best passer since Leeman's hurled

Steiner Muffs Chance To Tie With Wide Placement in Fourth

By Bill Burnett

Four perfect aerials in the first half, three by Triple-threater George Barnes, gave Western High a 20-0 triumph over Roosevelt yesterday on the winners' field as both teams made their initial start in the 1939 interhigh series.

About 2,500 wildly cheering schoolboy fans packed the stadium for the battle which Roosevelt had every right to win except the little matter of score.

The first touchdown of the Red Raiders, coming seconds before the close of the first period, saw the husky Barnes heave to Buck Herrlein from the Rider 35, the latter lateral to Ray Wrenn on the Rider 15, and the whole circus finally being stopped at the 10. Four plays later, with the ball on the 1-yard stripe, Barnes plowed over, and Jake Hilleary made the count 7-0 with a perfect slant to Roddy Snow.

Western, by early calculations the strongest public school club with the exception of Central, struck again before the second period was more than three minutes old. A bad kick by the Riders' Bernie Kolker, which sailed out on his own 43, set up the score, and after Barnes had rushed the line for 9 yards he made it good with his second pass, this time to Hal Mitchell from Roosevelt's 36. Mitchell grabbed the ball on the 25 and despite Johnny Page's valiant attempt to stop him, scored standing up. Barnes plunged through center for the extra point.

Open With Vengeance

It took Coach Dan Ahern's lads a mere matter of seconds to score again, but it was their last successful effort. Barnes contributed a ground gain of 23 yards from his own 46 to start the drive, hurled to Herrlein, who got to the Rider 9, and then rested while young Eddie Iglesias added the final points on a sharp toss to Snow. Barnes' attempted placement was blocked.

From that point until the end of the game, the play was all Roosevelt's.

Perfect Aerial Game Gives Red Raiders A 20-0 Victory

The annual grid "Battle of Brothers-In-Law"—between Coach Hardy Pearce's Central eleven and Coach Johnny Baker's Washington-Lee High club—ended with the Little Generals of Arlington taking an upset 14-13 victory at the Mount Pleasant stadium.

With more than 2,000 spectators on hand for what was expected to be one of the hardest-fought clashes of the early season, Benny Steiner, all-round star of Central, missed a chance to tie the score in the last two minutes of play when his attempted placement for a point after touchdown went wide.

Except for that lapse, however, Steiner starred in the loser's cause as much as Wally Legg, W.-L.'s fleet halfback, who tallied twice for the winners. Steiner hurled to Sam Di Blasi for Central's score in the second period, and then booted between the uprights to tie the score at 7-7. In the final period he took a pass from Harry Martin and brought Central within a single point of a deadlock with the second touchdown.

W.-L. Took Offensive

Washington-Lee deserved to win over the unbeaten interhigh champs, perhaps, by a wider score than it did. It was on the offensive throughout, taking leads in the first and fourth periods. Coach Baker's lads, paced by Legg and not excluding Alexander, a tiny back with an unextinguishable spirit, romped over the heavily favored Mount Pleasanters with the same ease with which they trounced Eastern and Western already this season.

Legg put W.-L. out in front before the game was many minutes old when he measured off 70 yards in two consecutive slants through the Blue and White line. The second gain went for a touchdown, and Left Tackle Hoover came out of the forward wall to successfully convert.

Hoping to enlarge its lead, W.-L. attempted a field goal as the second half began, but Di Blasi blocked it

Eastern High Blanks Wilson Eleven, 19-0

Paced by Francis Hallama, a shifty halfback, Eastern High finally succeeded in winning its first football game of the season, downing a spirited but inexperienced Wilson eleven, 19-0, yesterday at Eastern Stadium before 1,500 spectators.

But even in its moment of triumph, two outstanding factors served to cloud the Eastern horizon. First, and probably most important, the winners lost for the remainder of the season the services of Bob Byers, a 6-foot wingman who was the target of Eastern passes this season. Byers was rushed to Providence Hospital when he suffered a broken leg midway in the third period as a Wil-

Desperate Dodgers Shoot for Moon to Get Winning Team

By International News Service

New York, Oct. 13.—The Brooklyn Dodgers have made the biggest offer in the history of the National Football League to President George Halas of the Chicago Bears for the immediate services of Sid Luckman, Columbia University's 1938 All-America triple-threat back, Owner Dan Topping announced today.

LUCKMAN

"The Dodgers will spare no expense to sign new players to improve its chances to win the Eastern division championship this season," said Topping. "Luckman is our first choice in the new policy. He is a popular Brooklyn lad and he was often referred to as 'Columbia's one-man football team' last year. He will be a welcome and powerful addition to the Dodgers."

The Brooklyn owner refused to divulge the terms of his offer to Halas, but said they represent a record high for the league.

The Pittsburgh Pirates originally picked Luckman in the league's annual player negotiation list last winter and subsequently traded him to the Bears. Last summer Halas signed Luckman to a two-year contract for what he said was one of the highest salaries ever paid a first-year player.

Latin Gridders Defeated, 6-0

Striking through the air before the game was 3 minutes old, St. Alban's gridmen took their second straight victory of the season yesterday, a 6-0 decision over Boy's Latin School, of Baltimore.

Halfback Dave Davidson was on the throwing end of three successive passes that picked up 40 yards and the winning margin. Derek Schoenfeld took the first for 10 yards, Taylor Chewning the second for another 10, and George Trible accounted for the crucial 20. The try for extra point was wide.

Pirate Eleven Will Introduce New Pro Star

A newcomer to professional football who wears the uniform of the Pittsburgh Pirates will be the chief object of the Redskins' attentions tomorrow afternoon at Griffith Stadium. The Redskins' line and secondary defense will keep a wary eye peeled for Hugh (Mac) McCullough.

The 185-pound McCullough has inherited most of Whizzer White's duties with the Pittsburgh club following his displays in the Pirates' early-season games. The Pirates were quick to claim him in the draft last fall after he played a heroic role in leading Oklahoma to the Big Six championship.

McCullough actually showed a higher passing efficiency than Davey O'Brien last year, and it was the two touchdowns that he scored through the Nebraska line which brought Oklahoma the Big Six title.

The Pirates will arrive in Washington tonight and will establish headquarters at the Annapolis Hotel.

A crowd of 25,000 is expected to throng Griffith Stadium for the game despite the fact that the Pirates are not highly rated in the National League. The 14-7 game they played against the New York Giants last Sunday boomed Pittsburgh stock. The Pirates thrust back the Giants' running game and succumbed only to a pair of passes hurled by Ed Danowski to Ward Cuff. Three times in the final period Pittsburgh was within the Giants' 10-yard line.

Coach Ray Flaherty, of the Redskins, called his team into a long lecture last night following a ragged workout at Griffith Stadium.

De-Emphasized Johns Hopkins in Grid Debut Today

Baltimore, Oct. 13 (AP).—Johns Hopkins' de-emphasized, play-for-fun football team will open its season here tomorrow by entertaining Washington College at Homewood while Navy and Dartmouth battle in the stadium.

From the standpoint of a crowd, Hopkins doesn't mind the competition at all. People don't pay to see Hopkins play. They come by invition of the school.

Washington College, which lost by one point to Swarthmore in its opener, has a clever backfield but an inexperienced line. Hopkins will place its scoring hopes on Ed Spilman, triple-threat back.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

One of the better college football games destined for a Washington gridiron this season—perhaps the best—is the affair that will commence with the toot of a referee's whistle at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The Catholic U.-Detroit U. battle packs all the elements of a slashing set-to.

POVICH

A bad football team has never come out of the University of Detroit, at least not since Gus Dorais took over at the Jesuit school. Dorais is probably the reason for that. The little fellow who quarterbacked Notre Dame when the late Knute Rockney was a rising young end, has little use for inept football players. His Detroit teams have never won many championships, but they have been the kind of teams that colleges with championship aspirations have been happy to duck.

Georgetown had a team of that kind back in 1926 and 1927 when Lou Little's rock-ribbed lines were the pinnacle of the art. Georgetown won no championship, but Knute Rockne paid G. U. a tribute when the subject of a Notre Dame-Georgetown game was mentioned. "You're too tough, Lou," said Rockne, declining the game. "Notre Dame would have everything to lose and little to gain by playing you. You might beat us." And Rockne vowed that he wasn't fooling.

Supposed to Be Best Since 1927 Eleven

Last season wasn't one of Detroit's good seasons. In the tough Jesuit league Detroit licked Boston College, but lost by a touchdown to such as Villanova and Duquesne. And there was a 19-6 beating by Purdue. But at the finish Dorais was bringing his team along fast. It slapped down the potent Santa Clara crew, 6 to 0, in the season's finale, which was no mean feat inasmuch as Santa Clara had trampled Stanford, 22-0.

This 1939 Detroit club of Dorais' is supposed to be his best since 1927 when the Titans started a streak of victories and reeled off 19 in a row until November, 1929. The Titans aren't approaching today's game unarmed with advance information about C. U. either. Andy Farkas, one of Dorais' most illustrious products, has been taking advantage of his presence with the Redskins in Washington to scout the Catholic U. squad for Dorais.

Graven on the memory of Washington football fans is the play of Farkas when he was performing for Detroit three years ago against Catholic U. in Griffith Stadium. How he ran back two kickoffs to touchdowns, how he toted punts for gains of more than 50 yards was not lost on Redskin Coach Ray Flaherty who promptly made Farkas his first choice in the draft that fall.

A Couple of Fleet Backs on Invader's Squad

Bob Addie, the reformed sports writer who is now thumping the tubs in behalf of C. U. football, has dug up some of his finest similies to describe the current Detroit eleven. "Dorais," says Addie, "claims to have a couple of backs that are so fast they'd make Challedon look as if he were walking through quicksand in iron boots.

He has a triple-threat back in Al Ghesquiere, who is supposed to be the hottest thing since Lloyd Brazil (former Detroit) burned up the Midwest in 1920. And we hear that the Titans have more deception than a magician's convention. Dorais doesn't go in for these big, lumbering backs. Deception and speed are the keynotes of a Detroit attack. Any way you look at it, it's going to be quite a ball game and if there are any tickets left I'll eat 'em (with a little salt and pepper)."

But whatever the situation may be, there is evidence that Dutch Bergman is prepared for it today. The Dutchman has been struggling for a couple of years with misfit squads of jaded seniors and inept sophomores, but this season there are grounds for belief that Bergman is loaded for one of his best seasons.

Detroit's attack isn't expected to take Bergman unawares. Dorais practices the football he learned at Notre Dame and the Notre Dame system has no stauncher disciple than Bergman. It was at South Bend as a star halfback not long after Dorais graduated that Bergman learned the football he knows and today's affair will be a clash of Notre Dame systems.

Detroit Hasn't Been Tested So Far

Thus far C. U. has accomplished the defeats of Elon and South Carolina. No particular importance attaches to the victory over Elon, but South Carolina is no pushover. Detroit, however, hasn't been tested this season. The Titans knocked over Central State Teachers and Western State Teachers by boxcar numbers and have been merely pointing for today's game.

Whatever success Catholic U. attains today is expected to be delivered by two of Bergman's backs named Tocco Pirro and Charley Moutenot. Pirro is the sort who can break loose and go all the way and surprise nobody. Last week he bustled through Elon for a 77-yard touchdown run and gained at will all afternoon. And if you like the play of the C. U. ends this afternoon, tell Wayne Millner. The old Notre Damer and current Redskin ace has been trying to teach the C. U. ends all he knows. Whatever happens today, the Notre Dame system can't lose.

Duke-Pitt Game Tops Nation's Grid Card

By Bill Boni.
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Oct. 13.—Behind a nicely-balanced offense featuring intersectional games on the one hand and backyard scraps on the other, college football really shifts into high gear tomorrow.

Intersectionally, the day's standout should be the meeting between Pitt's de-emphasized but faster moving Panthers and the Blue Devils of Duke University. Notre Dame-Southern Methodist, Texas-Oklahoma, Tulane-Fordham and Southern California-Illinois form the second line of attack.

The Big Ten will offer the strongest sectional line-up. Leading the list are two games in which both State-Northwestern and Minnesota-Purdue. Cornell will make its first bid for Eastern Ivy League honors against Princeton; Mississippi State will seek its second Southeastern Conference scalp—Auburn's; Baylor will open its Southwest Conference campaign against Arkansas, and California, knocked off and down by two "outsiders," will have Oregon's winning streak to crack in its Pacific Coast Conference bow.

At Columbus, incubator of grandstand quarterbacks, they're counting on a turnout of 60,000 to see the Buckeys play vengeance-bent Northwestern. A similar crowd is expected at Los Angeles for Southern California-Illinois, and these should be the day's high attendance figures.

Forewarned by Florida's upset of Boston College yesterday, but not quite sure how you go about getting

Burdette Rolls 160 Game

One of the highest individual games in the Navy Yard Bowling League, a 160, was rolled last night at Lucky Strike by "Red" Burdette, D. M. Shop No. 1 pin smasher, as he tied for high individual set with Drawing Room's Bill Brazerol, and helped his team to high game of 608. The disputed individual set was 402. Drawing Room rolled an 1,805 for high team set.

With the exception of Carl Rittenhouse's 147 in Capitol No. 1's behalf for high game, Manor No. 1 dominated Country Club League rolling. It's Tom Dennis took set 375, assisting to a team game of 597 and set of 1,782. The prize was two wins over Kenwood, No. 2.

ARCADE

Jean Goodman had the best game —123—Louise Battagalia high set—337—and Peerless swept team honors with 530 and 1,533 as the Independent Ladies saw a hot night of action.

QUEEN PIN

A tie for first place in the Southeast Bowling League resulted when Bacas Brothers whitewashed A. B. Price, Florist, behind Clem Smith's set of 362. "Chick" Davis turned in a 147 game and 393 set, though his Quality Shop mates were edged out by Bantam Press, 2 to 1.

TAKOMA

Dome Oil, with bests in every department, won three from Takoma Billiards to advance to take first place in the Takoma Association. Goodrich had game, 189; set, 400, and the team combined for game and set of 624 and 1,701.

Armstrong Knocks Out Cowboy Scott

By the Associated Press

Minneapolis, Oct. 13.—Henry Armstrong, world's welterweight champion, knocked out Howard (Cowboy) Scott, Washington, D. C., in the second round of a scheduled 10-round title bout tonight. Scott never had a chance.

The dusky little champion moved in to the attack from the first bell. He drove Scott about the ring with a shower of lefts and rights but the Washington boy fought back gamely, although outclassed.

Just before the end of the first round, the welterweight champion cut loose with a short left hook squarely to Scott's chin and the latter tumbled to the floor. Up at the count of nine he back-peddled for the remainder of the round.

Weaving and bobbing, Armstrong increased the pace as the second round started and shellacked Scott with a series of rights and lefts. Coming out of a mixup near the center of the ring, the titleholder drove a short right to the jaw and the fight was over.

The second round lasted one minute and 38 seconds.

Paralysis Causes Loyola to Cancel St. Mary's Game

By International News Service

Moraga, Calif., Oct. 13.—Due to the outbreak of infantile paralysis which has stricken four members of the Loyola University (Los Angeles) football team, next Sunday's game between Loyola and St. Mary's was called off tonight.

MADIGAN

The cancellation was announced by Coach Edward P. Madigan of St. Mary's after county health authorities had insisted they must quarantine the entire St. Mary's team if the game is played.

Health Officer W. A. Powell at Martinez informed Brother Albert, president of St. Mary's:

"If the St. Mary's football team plays Loyola next Sunday it will be necessary for me to place the entire squad in isolation for a period of 14 days from the date of the game."

50,000 Fans Expected to See Navy Battle Dartmouth Today

Both Teams Are Refusing Favored Role

Middies Drilled on Air Game; Big Green Ready for Meeting In Municipal Stadium

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Oct. 13.—A pronounced favorite was lacking tonight as Dartmouth and Navy prepared to take the field on the morrow in the presence of an expected throng of 50,000 fans at vast Municipal Stadium. Both Navy, encamped at Annapolis, and Dartmouth, with quarters in a Baltimore suburb, labeled themselves as the underdogs.

Barring a tie, one of the two teams will be removed from the ranks of the Nation's undefeated elevents. It will be their second meeting on the gridiron, Navy scoring a 13-6 triumph over a Dartmouth team in the same stadium ten years ago.

Dartmouth polished its offensive today in a workout at the nearby Tome School, while Navy staged a night workout at Annapolis. Navy Coach Swede Larson took a tip from the Allies and had his squad rehearsing air raid precautions after dusk.

Larson's insistence on aerial defense was strengthened by his scouts' reports that Dartmouth will take the field tomorrow with its best passing attack in recent years. That Larson is not neglecting his own passing game is seen in the presence of no less than three passing specialists in his own starting backfield—Bob Leonard, Ev Malcolm and Emmett Wood.

Marked men of the Dartmouth backfield will be Bill Hutchinson and Buford Hayden, versatile threats who have offset in a great measure the graduation of famed Bob McLeod, Dartmouth's All-American back of 1938. Hutchinson is hailed as the outstanding kicker in the East in addition to his ball-carrying proclivities, but Hayden is expected to bear the brunt of the Big Green's running game.

Hayden, bow-legged speedster of the Dartmouth backfield, only recently clinched a regular role. He will be making his debut in a major game today. His dazzling runs in early season games have led Dartmouth men to expect potent gains by him today.

Coaches Know Navy Game

Coaching the Dartmouth eleven are two men familiar with Navy football. They are Head Coach Earl Balik and his assistant, Harry Ellinger, who played their football and coached at Army where they prepared teams for many a battle with Navy.

Navy's stock dropped during the week with the revelation that Wes Gebert, the Middies' climax runner of the early games, would not be available today on account of injuries. Nor will French Durette, clever end, who also was seriously injured in the tough game with Virginia last week. Every other Navy regular, however, is in condition.

Two Officials Of St. Louis Browns Quit

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Oct. 13.—The secretary and a director of the St. Louis Browns resigned today at a board meeting which ended with an announcement that a vote of confidence had been taken in the club's officers and that Fred Haney, already signed to a contract, would manage the team again in 1940.

George C. Foster, an attorney and secretary of the club, and James R. Kearney, president of the Kearney Corporation, withdrew from the board, apparently as a result of dissatisfaction with the team's recent disastrous season, in which the Browns lost 111 games, a "wrong-way" record for a St. Louis American League team.

President Donald L. Barnes, smiling and affable, emerged from the meeting retaining the full control of the team that had been his since a group of prominent St. Louisans purchased the Browns from the Phil Ball estate for $325,000 in November, 1936.

"I never had any idea of resigning," he declared, "and nothing was said about it."

Describing the meeting as "constructive and harmonious," Barnes said in a statement the directors had unanimously adopted a resolution expressing their "appreciation for the untiring efforts of the management, and a vote of confidence and cooperation was unanimously passed."

Earlier this week there were reports that some directors, tired of playing "Santa Claus" to replenish the team's treasury, would demand a reorganization of the club, including the resignation of William O. Dewitt, vice president and general manager, and the dismissal of Haney.

The Proud Possessor of the Mid-Atlantic Women's Title

N.T.S. Eleven Beaten, 23-6, By Gonzagans

Their powerful aerial offense completely throttled by an unorthodox but effective National Training School defense, Gonzaga gridmen were forced to rely on straight line plays to whip the lads from Bladensburg road yesterday, but they did it quite convincingly, anyway.

The final score of the first morning game of the year at Gonzaga Field was 23-6 in the Purple's favor. N. T. S.'s only points resulted from a savage ground game in the second quarter, capped by a pair of bullet-like passes from the hand of Bob Davis, potent little halfback.

It took Gonzaga, whose latest effort was an upset triumph over Eastern High, exactly one period to get warmed up enough to score the first touchdown. It took a 2-0 lead, however, in the initial period, on a safety when N. T. S.'s Andy Eason centered the ball poorly to Zopha Rivers on the Training School five and it sailed over the goal.

Mulvihill Scores

Bob Mulvihill, wiry quarterback of the Gonzagans, scored on the first play of the second period. He shoved over from the one-yard line, then stepped back to give his team a 9-0 lead with a perfect placement.

Only a few plays later Coach Lee Carlin's light N. T. S. eleven got back into the game temporarily with its two perfect passes. Davis, standing on Gonzaga's 29, tossed to Wingman Billy Hughes and the latter reached the seven before he was stopped. The first aerial into the end zone was a bit wide, but the second, Davis to Rivers, was good for six points. Rivers' attempted placement hit the goal post.

At halftime, then, Gonzaga led by only 9-6. That was remedied rather suddenly, though, as the Purple pounded down the field to National Training School's 30. Campanella almost made a touchdown from that point, but was stopped on the four. On his first plunge over the line, Campanella was tackled so hard the ball bounded out of his arms and across the goal, but Center Dave Walsh recovered for the touchdown.

Raba Boots Goal

Elmer Raba, freshman sensation who played only a small part of the game, scored his only point on an accurate placement.

The final score in the fumble-and-penalty-ridden clash went to Gonzaga shortly before the end of the third period. Mulvihill, who was easily the star of the game, intercepted a N. T. S. pass on the 30 and slammed to the five. Johnny Scully plunged over on the first try, and Mulvihill converted.

Marion Brown Bows In Golf Finals, 5-4

Mrs. Stokes Wins Championship Over Washington Country Club Course After Brilliant March Through Middle-Atlantic Field

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

A comparative newcomer to competitive golf, but one who promises to be a familiar figure in the winner's circle—Mrs. Walter R. Stokes—completed a domination of the Middle Atlantic women's championship yesterday at Washington Golf and Country Club with a 5 and 4 victory over Marion Brown, an upset that was no surprise.

In the spring of 1937, Mrs. Stokes, a member of Indian Spring, competed in her first tournament, the Phyllis Keeler Memorial event, at Washington, and yesterday, less than three years later, she captured one of this section's more important titles over the same course with the ease of a Glenna Collett.

It was Miss Brown's third final round appearance in this tourney in the last three years, and her second setback. Three years ago she first came into prominence with the medal and finalist's berth in the Mid-Atlantic, last year won it with a course record score against Helen Dettweiler, and then fell into the runner-up role again.

A Breeze All Way

Mrs. Stokes' path to the title was the most one-sided in the 14-year history of the event. She finished a total of 22 holes up on her four opponents, Mrs. W. H. Wise, the consolation victor; Mrs. Jerome Sloman, the Maryland State champion; Mrs. L. G. Pray, the Manor Club titleholder, and Miss Burton, the defending champion.

The new champion, whose only previous victories were in medal events, the Star, Keefer and N. B. C. trophy events, was never down in the title match, was even only once after the first hole and had par for an 80 at the finish on the fourteenth hole, to her opponents par for an 84.

In any one shot was the turning point of the match it was a well-played approach on the eleventh hole, a crucial shot that stopped Miss Brown's rally that threatened to reach the proportions of her Thursday comeback against Mrs. Betty Meckley.

Mrs. Stokes, three up at the turn, lost the tenth hole by three-putting the green. She pulled her tee shot on the short eleventh into the ditch. Taking it out with a penalty stroke, she played a ticklish approach within 4 feet of the pin, and dropped the putt to halve Miss Brown's bogey four. The latter was on the side of the ditch, and had little chance for a three.

That shot was the real turning point of the match as she won the twelfth by outchipping and putting her youthful opponent, the thirteenth when Marion was trapped from the tee and flubbed an approach, and the fourteenth with a regulation par 3, for the match.

Forced to play at top speed all week against a trio of varied champions, Miss Brown was off to a rocky start in the finals, missing par on the first two holes and halving the third with a 6. Here the Manor representative rallied briefly with a pair of birdies to square the match, but on seven, eight and nine her putter was a definite liability and it led to the crowning of a new champion.

Mrs. H. J. Simons won the second flight, 7 and 6, over Mrs. W. E. Wessels, of Roanoke, as most of the other matches were all decided by one-sided scores. They included Mrs. Frank R. Keefer's 6 and 4 victory in the second flight consolation over Mrs. C. H. Merrilat, the three-time president of the District Women's Golf Association, posting four 3s during the match.

Championship Flight

Mrs. Walter Stokes (Indian Spring) defeated Marion Brown (Manor), 5 and 4.
Consolation—Mrs. W. H. Wise (Old Point Comfort) defeated Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely (Washington), 5 and 4.
Second Flight
Mrs. H. J. Simons (Manor) defeated Mrs. W. E. Wessells (Roanoke), 7 and 6.
Consolation—Mrs. Frank R. Keefer (Chevy Chase) defeated Mrs. C. H. Merrilats (Washington) 6 and 4.
Tird Flight
Mrs. O. M. Reed (Washington) defeated Mrs. R. P. Brandt (Washington), 4 and 2.
Consolation—Mrs. D. Wolhaupter (Washington) defeated Mrs. E. C. Kochersperger (Washington), 3 and 6.

Landon Prep Triumphs Over St. James, 41-0

Held to a 0-0 stalemate in its first start by Wilson High, Landon Prep took revenge on an outclassed St. James eleven yesterday on the home field by a 41-0 margin.

Twenty-two of the points were personally attended to by veteran Johnny Amussen, who ripped off three touchdowns on straight line plays and added four extra points by rushing. The other touchdowns were distributed between Chuck Boteler, on an aerial from Johnny Sager; Bob Orme and Bob Hill. Orme tallied the only extra point besides those of Amussen on a pass from Sager in the final quarter.

St. James was never able to furnish a serious threat, though 13 Landon reserves went into the game.

C. U. Faces Detroit Air Attack Today

Both Teams Seeking 3d Win of Season; Clash Listed for 2:30

It will be power versus speed this afternoon when Catholic University engages in the fifth renewal of its intersectional series with Detroit University at the Brookland Stadium before an anticipated crowd of 10,000. The kickoff will be at 2:30 p. m.

The Cardinals will have a 10-pound edge in both the line and backfield, but the advantage will be negligible because Gus Dorais, Titan coach, has replacements three deep for every position.

Dorais will have a team comprising eight sophomores and three juniors for his shock troops. Following the old Notre Dame system, Gus probably will switch by units.

While Coach Arthur J. (Dutch) Bergman is pessimistic over the outcome, he thinks his Cardinals have a good chance to win. Thus far, C. U. has won only one game in the previous four, and that was a 13-7 victory by the 1935 team which later went to the Orange Bowl.

Air Attack Promised

From all indications, the Titans will depend on a passing attack to beat Catholic University. Detroit is admittedly well endowed with backfield talent and has three boys in the left halfback post who are triple-threat men. Al Ghesquiere, the former All-Michigan high school star, is expected to bear the brunt of the Titan passing attack. Dorais feels the Cardinal line is too strong to puncture with line thrusts and Detroit probably will take to the air early.

For the Cardinals, Charley Moutenot and Big Rocco Pirro will do the principal mail carrying. Moutenot was tabbed by Andy Farkas, Redskin star and former Detroit luminary, as the best back on the field in last week's game against Elon.

The gray-haired young Frenchman apparently is just reaching his football maturity. He's a climax runner and a dangerous threat every minute. Detroit will have to bottle him up if it hopes to beat the Cardinals today.

Pirro Holds Card Hopes

Pirro is fast becoming one of C. U.'s most potent line-smashers. The Cardinals' Mighty Rock has torn enemy lines to shreds this year, and on his ability to pierce the Titan forward wall lies C. U.'s chances of victory.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Oct. 13.—Polo, and its aquatic cousin, water polo, have been adjudged the two roughest sports in existence. But what about rodeo competitions such as the riding of mavericks, putting half-nelsons on 700-pound steers, and playing basketball on horseback?

CONSIDINE

The figures aren't at hand but we have an den that the expectancy of life in the rodeo business is considerably lower than that in any other sports trade, excepting perhaps grenade-putting, flirting with a heavyweight fighter's wife and juggling depth bombs.

The greatest rodeo on the cowboy circuit is currently at Madison Square Garden, where $60,000 in purses will be distributed between now and the end of the month. It has attracted the Babe Ruths, the Ty Cobbs and the Joe DiMaggios of the screwy business, all fired by the common ambition to make money.

Cowboys are the most fierce professionals in the world. Neither limb nor life matter a heluva lot when those leather-faced, bowlegged babies from the lone pray-ree go out on the Garden's tanbark to do or die, or both, for the dough that will irrigate the lower 40 on the ranch utside Alpine, Tex. There aren't any amateurs in this business.

Some of Those Gals Are Downright Pretty

Though you can't throw a rock at the Garden without hitting a cowgirl, some of whom might be downright beautiful if they ever learned how to dress, the rodeo business is fundamentally a man's game. The men make the money, take the knocks, get the cheers from the strangely excited urban audiences, and occasionally get knocked off—to a threnody that is a blend of honking taxicabs and the Eighth avenue subway—a curious kind of death for a fellow whose destiny it was to be a fence rider and doagie keeper on some passive plain.

We talked to a couple of them today. One was Hank Mills, former jockey. He rode for Mrs. Phipps' Wheatley Stable five or six years ago. Rode in the Derby, Preakness, Futurity and all the big ones. He is out of a place called Montrose, Colo., and used to weigh only 82 pounds.

Now he weighs 150 or so, a short, squat, powerful kid who is making a name for himself as a bronk buster. He takes part in those hilarious cowboy basketball games on horseback, and frightens you the way he can dismount, run beneath a horse's hooves and retrieve the ball. He broke his first bronco when he was 6 years old. It's no wonder he handled those thoroughbreds so well, when he was a figure at Belmont, Pimlico, Churchill Downs and Miami.

Wild Horse Renders Bennett Very Untalkative

We talked to Hugh Bennett, too. We say we talked to Hugh because Hugh couldn't do much talking to us. A wild horse jerked its head up the other night and hit him in the mouth, knocking out two of his teeth, loosening a lot of others and cutting his chin through to the gum, a super-Louis kayo punch. Hugh went to the college at Abilene, Tex., played end on the football team, and is in the cattle business. But like three or four hundred other great riders who compete in from 20 to 25 rodeos each year, he is home only about two months a year, to recuperate, spend his winnings on land or cattle, and get in shape for the next grueling season.

Gene Pittman Gets Berth in Finals

Gene Pittman was given a final round berth in the Congressional Club Championships yesterday when Earl McAleer, cofavored with Billy Shea in the title play, was forced to default due to a swollen knee that failed to get better this week. Pittman and Shea will meet for the title tomorrow afternoon at 2 p. m. It will mark Shea's second straight year in the finals, as he lost to Claude Rippy last year.

The Pittman-McAleer match was scheduled last week-end, but they postponed the match due to McAleer's knee. He notified Wiffy Cox yesterday that he was unable to play.

Dixiana Stable's Allegro Wins Medina Purse at Laurel

Victor Pays His Backers $7.70 Ticket

Shoulder Arms Takes Place Money; Airflame Wins Show Spoils; a Crowd of 9,000 Out

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 13.—Staging a stretch rush that caught the leaders tiring, Allegro, representing the Dixiana Stable, went on to win by a length in the Medina Purse, outstanding event on the day's program here. A crowd of 9,000, defying the Friday, the 13th, jinx, saw the 3-year-old son of High Time and Brenda hang defeat on the Longchamps Stable's Shoulder Arms, A. G. Vanderbilt's Airflame and eight other sprinters of the first flight.

Ridden by Alfred Robertson, former C. V. Whitney saddle ace and now under contract to the Milky Way Stable, Allegro returned $7.70 to his backers and turned in time of 1:12 1-5, the best for sprinting in several days.

Airflame outbroke his field and had opened a length lead before the group had gone a furlong. Shoulder Arms, under slight restraint, was close up with Evening Shadow, a longshot, third and ahead of Allegro. Evening Shadow dropped out of it on the swing for the stretch, but otherwise the forward order remained the same. Robertson had a good grip on Allegro which he turned loose as the leaders swung into the stretch.

In midstretch, it appeared that Airflame might stick it out to win. But Allegro had the most punch. Apprentice R. Scott drew his whip and let Airflame have it, but the horse weakened suddenly. Shoulder Arms, however, came on, but he could not resist the kind of speed that Allegro was showing.

The daily double drought a payoff of $73.30. Chatabit, ridden by Apprentice C. Wells, surprised by taking the first race in a photo finish with Fair Rock. Grand Marie was third in this field of 12. In the third race, the transaction was completed by Run By, which got up in the stretch to win under the guidance of Jockey Charlie Kurtsinger.

CHATABIT, slow to begin and taken in on rail to save ground, came through on inside entering stretch and came with bold rush in final straightaway to be up in concluding stride. FAIR ROCK had to be rushed to get to front, opened a good lead and closed gamely; could not resist winner. GRAND MARIE, slow to begin, came with rush entering stretch, moved up to FAIR ROCK in threatening fashion, but weakened right at end. NANSEMOND took lead early, could not match strides with FAIR ROCK and weakened. MY CREST had speed in spots. FERNBRAKE had early speed and stopped. DULIE could not keep up. BALCONY flashed early foot and dropped back.

FARRAGUT, headed along for mile, moved to front when PHILLIPS PETE fell at tenth fence and continued gamely while fencing well to hold BUCK LANGHORNE safe under punishment on final flat. BUCK LANGHORNE, steadied closest to PHILLIPS PETE'S early pace, was bothered repeatedly by loose horse and came gamely when clear approaching end. TOUTMEPAL was always outrun. THORNY ROSE had early speed and was very tired at end.

THIRD RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall. Won driving; place same. Went to post 2:35. Off 2:37½. Winner, H. P. Metcalf's br. c. WALTER LIGHT raced QUESTRE into submission to get to front, but could not resist winner. QUESTRE was hustled to front going to first turn, saved ground and weakened in final quarter. MAC'S CANTOR was forward factor on inside and weakened gradually after a half. CANNON BLAST went evenly. CAREER GIRL had no excuses. NEGOPI made up some ground and then faltered.

Daily Double, CHATABIT and RUN BY, Paid $73.30

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100. The Newcastle. For 2-year-old fillies. Start good from stall. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:06. Off 3:09½. Winner, E. A. Asbury's ch. b. f. GALA BELLE, forward factor from break, raced along with ARDEN LASS pace and drew out when placed to drive to win while opening a gap. TRUE CALL raced on outside from beginning and came gamely at close. ARDEN LASS was rushed to 109, but could not shake off GALA BELLE after disposing of REQUIP and GOLDEN LASS and was weakening at close. TRUE KNIGHTESS saved ground entering stretch to loom menacingly and hung in closing sixteenth. MISTLETOE closed with good energy. GOLDEN LASS, off poorly, went to leaders with bold rush while racing greenly and weakened. REQUIP was through early. The others were outrun.

AIRFLAME set strong pace to midstretch and weakened suddenly. BIRCH ROD, off poorly, had speed to rush up along rail with terrific rush and hung thereafter. SLOW MOTION, off slowly, rallied mildly. EVENING SHADOW moved up menacingly and stopped. BULL WHIP was caught between horses entering stretch. EVENING SHADOW had early speed. PERNIE lacked racing room entering stretch. REHEARSAL, shuffled back leaving backstretch, was in close quarters entering stretch.

TEDDY'S GIRL, allowed to settle into stride and not hurried for a half, came with good energy when placed to drive to better position on outside and closed full of run to win going away. SLUMP was rated while saving ground to stretch, came through on inside and closed gamely, but was no match for winner. THE THRUSH alternated in setting and pressing pace with PATSEY BEGONE, opened a good lead in midstretch and faltered suddenly. PATSEY BEGONE set early pace and weakened. SNEAKY HENRY moved up menacingly approaching far turn and tired. THE QUEEN closed gamely. CANDLE ENDS was through early.

SYRACUSE, close up from start, went to front on backstretch and held away thereafter under strong handling. OVERSIGHT, slow to get away, came wide for racing room while bettering position, but hung in final drive. TIME BEATER, forced to take up sharply when in close quarters going into backstretch, saved ground thereafter to move up gradually and was tiring at end. IMITRA was keen forward factor to stretch and weakened to end. CONNIE PLAUT closed with bold rush. FLYING JACK went evenly. BURNER was through after a quarter. CANORIERRON came with good courage and closed willingly, but could not match winner. COUNTER PASS closed with bold rush. SHALAKO lacked early speed and came willingly between horses in final test. VICTORY LIGHT saved ground to better position and hung. VICKSON moved up boldly to press pace and weakened in closing stages. FLYING CENTAUR had early speed. ROCKY MEADOW was well placed for half and faltered. BILL BLEIWEISS stopped.

Georgetown Favored Over Syracuse Today

Hoyas in Great Shape For Syracuse Battle; Hagerty Is Confident Boys Will Take Game

By Jack Munhall,
A Staff Correspondent.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 13.—Only a slight favorite abong the betters, but surprisingly an overwhelming popular choice with the city's natives, Georgetown University tomorrow moves into a crucial football game with Syracuse University's rugged Orange with its prime objective the extension of a winning streak begun in 1937. An attendance of 25,000 is predicted if the Weather Man's forecast of rain and snow proves wrong.

Georegtown, greatly strengthened by the return to its line-up of Jules Koshlap, ace forward passer and also a dangerous ball carrier, is expected to strike through the air against Ossie Solem's heavier Orange squad, which, according to best advices, is torn by dissension.

Disappointing So Far

Syracuse, touted in preseason predictions as one of the finest elevens in the East because of an unusual abundance of fine material and the guiding hand of Ossie Solem, who last year directed the first Orange victory over Colgate in 14 years, has been disappointing—to put it mildly.

This bustling little town that salt built is openly disloyal to Syracuse and almost all of the money being wagered on tomorrow's game is on Jack Hagerty's boys.

Hagerty is confident that Georgetown can win its eleventh straight by beating the same Syracuse team that was extended to Clarkson until manpower wore down the little foe and by Cornell which held it scoreless until the final minutes. But should Syracuse come out tomorrow fired with a winning spirit and determined to show Syracuse fans that it has the stuff, then Georgetown will be doubly pressed.

Team in Great Shape

However, the Hoyas are in excellent shape, both mentally and physically and were in fine form in a finial and light workout held this afternoon at Archbold Stadium, site of the game. Koshlap, benefited by a two weeks' rest because of an injury sustained in the Temple game, never was passing more accurately or sharper than today. Augie Lio, the squat guard who kicked the field goal that beat Temple, was banging over placement kicks from as far out as the 40-yard line. And the punting of Frank Meglen, Joe Daniels and Lou Shecas drew audible whistles of astonishment from onlookers.

With Koshalp back, the Hoyas are missing only one regular. End Francis Daly, who didn't make the trip owing to a shoulder injury. In his place will be John Lascari, a sophomore, who won his chance through consistently good performance in scrimmage last week.

The probable line-up:

Georgetown.	Position.	Syracuse
Kopcik	L.E.	Batten
Fullilove	L.T.	Hooper

cant thing in the first half—they completed exactly none—the Riders opened up with a vengeance after the intermission. With little Billy Hall, a 140-pound sharpshooter, on the throwing end Roosevelt began a wild display of air force. In all, Roosevelt attempted 27 passes, completed 10 of them and saw 4 intercepted.

The Thirteenth Streeters whipped Western as far as first downs were concerned. Thirteen of them they amassed against Western's three, and nine came in the final half. Erwin Breier, another tiny back uncovered by Coach Artie Boyd, assisted Hall in the air with his left-hand pitches, but most of the credit went to Bernie Kolker, youngest of the Kolker football clan. He pounded the Raider line into a shapeless mass in the final half, only to see his mates lose their chances to score on intercepted passes or fumbles.

Armstrong's Manager Considers Title Bout

Minneapolis, Oct. 13 (AP).—Eddie Mead, manager of Henry Armstrong, world's welterweight boxing champion, today said he had under consideration terms offered by Newark, N. J., promiters for a title bout there with Freddie (Red) Cochrane.

Mead said a guarantee of $20,000 had been offered Armstrong. He said everything appeared acceptable and he would be in Newark October 27, to close terms definitely with the New Jersey promoters.

Duke-Pitt Game Tops Day's Card

Pitt-Duke (50,000)—Since both have added scoring punch, this hardly should be a repetition of Duke's 7-0 win in the snow last year. Still, the winner should be the same—Duke.

Ohio State-Northwestern (80,000)—The Wildest sophomores have got one bad game out of their systems. Northwestren, without guarantee.

Tulane-Fordham (40,000)—DeFilipo and Principe, ready for full-time duty backing up the line, should make a difference in a Fordham team that lost to Alabama. Still, Tulane seems to have too much power.

Five-Year Plan Works

Texas-Oklahoma (35,000)—Dana Bible's five-year plan seems to be working. Also, Oklahoma's Jack Jacobs is hurt. Texas, on a hunch.

Notre Dame-Southern Methodist (45,000)—The Irish aren't winning by much, but they're winning. Notre Dame.

Michigan-Iowa (45,000)—Michigan has three fine backs in Harmon, Kromer and Evashevski; Iowa has one in Nile Kinnick. The majority and Michigan.

Princeton-Cornell (35,000)—The Tigers didn't get far against the Williams line, and the Big Red line is considerably tougher. Cornell.

Louisiana State-Rice (30,000)—L. S. U. and Ken Kavanaugh.

Minnesota-Purdue (35,000)—The Gophers haven't lost two in a row since 1932. Purdue's Lou Brock still is favoring a bad ankle. Minnesota.

Columbia-Army (33,000)—Army, largely for the same reason.

Auburn-Mississippi State (15,000)—State They seem to have more drive.

and Dick Farr scooped the ball up and ran to the Central 30 before he was thrown. After losing the ball on downs on the 2-foot line, Central came on again to finally realize its opening score when Steiner hurled to Di Blasi from the 25. Steiner made the placement good.

In the fourth quarter another pair of dazzling runs by Legg accounted for the Generals' second touchdown. Starting at exact midfield the track dash man reeled off the distance behind excellent blocking by his mates. Hallama Paces Team To Victory, Its First Of This Season son player was blocking him out of the play.

Secondly, the Easterners showed a superior running attack but completely lacked a scoring punch when it came within scoring distance. This will undoubtedly improve as the season progresses, but as Coach Mike Kelley says, "the loss of Byers will be keenly felt."

Parkers Bog Down

The Lincoln Parkers reeled off three first downs in the first quarter to place the ball deep in Wilson territory, but once within the 20-yard line, the attack bogged down and the Presidents took the ball on downs. Hallama and Soo stood out in this attack with runs of 18 and 15 yards, respectively.

Eastern opened the scoring in the second quarter with a brace of touchdowns, counting first when Hallama circled end from the 6-yard line after two passes by Cohill to Byers had placed the ball there. Cohill's pass for the extra point went astray. The second touchdown occurred in the same quarter when, after Eddie Teague had ankled to a first down at the Wilson 26, Cohill faded back to the 35 and hurled a perfect pass into the outstretched hands of Bob Woolwine, who took it in the end zone. Teague converted from placement.

The Parkers unveiled a new running star in the third quarter in the person of Sol Iroff, a fleet 145-pound halfback, who single-handedly placed the ball in scoring position with three lengthy runs, but once again the winners were unable to capitalize on the situation and were forced to punt over the goal. Twice the Parkers were in scoring territory this quarter and twice the President line repulsed their every advance.

Final Touchdown

The fourth quarter, however, found the Easterners concluding their day's scoring with a final touchdown. It was an intercepted pass which set the stage for the score, Hallama snaring an errant Wilson heave on the Wilson 47-yard line. Moe Shulman, erstwhile Tech High basketeball star, dashed 13 yards for a first down at the 35. Another 15-yard run by Hallama placed the ball on the 22 and from here Yocum passed to Teague who gathered it in on the 10-yard stripe and outdistanced the Wilson safety man to the goal. Teague's attempted conversion went wide of the uprights.

The losers filled the air with passes in the last few minutes of play in a vain attempt to score, but for the most part they were wild, misaimed heaves which failed to find their mark.

Wilson failed to exhibit anything resembling a potent running attack, the Easterners compiling a total of 18 first downs to one for the Presidents.

Coach Gene Augusterfer, whose St. John's gridmen meet Anacostia High this morning at Eastern Stadium at 10:30, yesterday announced that Frank Cady, halfback, and Wingman Ed Fogarty would be out of the Johnnie line-up the remainder of the season. Both were injured in the Central clash Monday night, Cady suffering torn ligaments in his shoulder and Fogarty a dislocated elbow. Their loss, Augusterfer said, lessens his chances to repeat the 1938 beating given Gonzaga, the Johnnies' chief rival

U. of Virginia Frosh Defeat Young Keydets

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 13.—Virginia's freshmen eleven won over Virginia Military Institute frosh here today, 21 to 0, for its second victory of the season.

The young Keydets presented a formidable line, but proved weak on offense, making but four first downs and advanced the ball beyond midfield only once.

The baby Cavaliers opened with a rush and scored a touchdown early in the first period. Starting fro mthe 35-yard line, Daly, who registered bot htouchdowns against Washington and Lee last week, dashed through the line for 18 yards, and on the next play Eichelbaum skirted the end to score standing. There was no scoring in the second quarter.

The Keydets made their best showing defensively at the start of the second half, when they twice stopped the Cavaliers within the 15-yard line. Near the close, Virginia got possession of the ball on her 37-yard line and marched down the field, Daly making the score on a 10-yard dash around right end. The try for placement was blocked, but Daly picked up the pigskin and dashed across the goal line for the extra point.

Demmler and Romm did most of the ground gaining for the Keydets, while Kearfoot, Williams, Minton, Winter and Ellington showed up well in the line.

The Cavaliers registered a total of 13 first downs, the longest runs being made by Daly, Gillette and West.

Gamecocks Nip Davidson, 7-0

By the Associated Press

Sumter, S. C., Oct. 13.—South Carolina registered its first football victory of the year today by scoring a touchdown against Davidson with less than 5 minutes playing time remaining. The score was 7-0.

Davidson, needing only inches for a first down on its 37-yard line, failed to make the distance and yielded the ball. From there the Gamecocks scored in seven plays, Blouin, South Carolina halfback, bumping two yards over tackle for the score. J. Henson converted from placement.

The crowd of 3,000 saw a tit-for-tat fumbling exhibition in the early periods in which neither club generated a drive.

Gallup Urged To Take Poll On Arms Ban

Legislator Criticizes Previous Check for Implying RepealWanted

Representative Karl Mundt (Republican), South Dakota, yesterday criticized a recent Gallup poll for implying that America wants the arms embargo repealed, although, he said, the questions and answers published "show no such thing." He urged Dr. George Gallup to conduct another poll on the arms embargo issues.

"I have heard your poll quoted in Congress to show 'the American public favors repeal of the arms embargo,'" said Mundt in a letter to Dr. Gallup made public yesterday, referring to Dr. Gallup's article in The Washington Post of October 11.

The article revealed that 60 per cent of the American public think that "Congress should change the neutrality law so that England and France or any other nations can buy war supplies here."

This questiin does not represent the issue of the arms embargo, Representative Mundt said, since "any other nations" may refer to non-belligerents not affected by the embargo, and "war supplies" could mean "wheat, cotton, beef, razor blades or any other non-military commodity" not covered by the embargo.

The Congressman declared that the text accompanying the statistics draws "startling irrelevant and disassociated deductions" from the figures and implies that the poll was designed to gather American opinion "on proposed repeal of the arms embargo."

Mundt quoted as an "obvious example of how the statistics and the statements of this report fight against each other" the statement, in the article of October 11, that "those voters who think the neutrality law should remain unchanged and the arms embargo in force argue, principally, that to lift the embargo would lead the United States into war."

Against this he asserted that "nothing (is) asked and nothing answered by which it can scientifically be concluded that any percentage of those questioned did or did not favor selling 'arms, munitions and implements of war' to 'belligerent nations.' The person interviewed is asked question and his answer is interpreted to mean something entirely different."

"Many Congressmen join with the writer in coveting for ourselves an accurate analysis of just what the American public does desire regarding repeal of the embargo," Representative Mundt went on, suggesting that Dr. Gallup conduct another poll directly on the arms embargo issue.

Mundt expressed "complete confidence in Dr. Gallup's integrity and sincerity of purpose," and praised the Gallup poll as "an unbiased and scientific effort to sample public opinion without design or prejudice."

Methodists Plan Homecoming at Brookland Church

Private Plane Sales Show Gain of 90%

Hester Says America Soon Will Dominate The World in Aviation

A startling awakening of interest in commercial and private flying in the United States has put the airline business "in the black" for the first six months of 1939, and resulted in a 90 per cent increase in sales of domestic civil planes, Clinton M. Hester, administrator of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, announced last night.

These advances, he said, in a talk prepared for delivery before the New Orleans (La.) meeting of the National Association of State Aviation Officials, should be credited to "the newcomer to civil aeronautics . . . none other than the funny little man who solves so many other ills—the eager customer!"

Last summer, Hester asserted, "every individual airline made a profit, a situation that never existed before in all the history of air transportation."

He predicted commercial traffic will make the "winter trough for 1939-1940 . . . look like the summer hump for previous years" and added that "internationally, we can say that today's actualities will, almost inevitably, lead to American domination of the aviation field, with all such domination implies nowadays in national prestige and power . . ."

Drawing attention to the quality of Amrican international airlines, Hester said that very soon United States planes will give "the old sun a very good race from the heart of the British Empire in London to its farthest outpost in Australia, 'the land down under,' and that every day and night in the Western Hemisphere these planes carry the flag athwart the sun's path from Nome in Alaska to Buenos Aires in the Argentine.

Present indications suggest the airlines will carry approximately 2,300,000 passengers this year rather than about 1,800,000 as had been expected earlier, he continued.

He pointed out there has been an increase in the past year of nearly 6,000 certified fliers, without taking into consideration the 10,000 pilots undergoing instruction in the Civil Aeronautics Authority's pilot training program.

Asserting there are 26,000 fliers in the United States today, Hester said the expectation of 40,000 pilots by the end of the current fiscal year, "would seem to be indeed conservative."

Banks Report Expansion of Loan Demand

Industrial Rise and Higher Commodity Prices the Cause

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Various banks recently have noted improvement in the demand for loans, most important reports of the kind in some time, and higher earnings have also been announced. Regarding such improvement, the American Banker explains that with industrial activity on the increase and commodity prices rising, it is obvious that commercial loans are going to ascend. Thus the banks are expecting to be able to employ their funds to a greater extent than at present, and the rate of return they will receive will be higher than at this time.

"With the approach of a period when commercial loans will increase and interest rates rise, it is being emphasized that the banks pay no interest on demand deposits. At previous times, when interest rates were rising, the banks would have to increase the amount of interest to customers. This time, such will not be the case, the publication states.

District C. P. A. Institute

At a meeting of the District of Columbia Institute of Certified Public Accountants held this week, President Harold C. Anderson presided, and the guest speaker was Lyle H. Olson, New York, vice president of the American Appraisal Co. That financial statements should include a more complete disclosure of property and economic facts was the major thesis of Mr. Olson's address.

He discussed the inventory verification problem, the bases of valuation of intangible assets, and the financial, economic and property facts that could reasonably be developed by accountants and appraisers for the benefit of the investor. Mr. Olson contended that in the requirements with respect to financial statements filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission there should be a more realistic recognition of economic facts and conditions.

His address was followed by a discussion on the relative parts the accountant and the appraiser should play in the development of financial and economic information pertaining to an enterprise, for the use of management, the stockholder, the investing public and others interested.

Steel Industry Cuts Bonded Debt 30% in 13 Years

New York, Oct. 13.—Between 1925 and 1938 the steel industry reduced its funded debt by more than $360,000,000, the American Iron and Steel Institute says today. The reduction effected a yearly saving of nearly $32,000,000 in interest charges which must be paid before consideration of dividend payments to stockholders.

The industry's funded debt was cut from $1,315,000,000 in 1925 to $953,000,000 at the end of 1938, a reduction of close to 30 per cent. Largely because of the debt-reduction program, annual interest charges on the industry's bonds during the five years 1934-1938 averaged $36,000,000 per year, or little more than half of the average annual interest charges in the five years prior to 1925.

Reduction in bonded indebtedness and in fixed interest charges was an important factor in reducing the net losses of the industry in the 1931-1934 depression years and in 1938.

If the industry's interest charges in 1938 had been as large as the average in the five years prior to 1925, its net loss in 1938 would have been about $44,000,000, or about three times the actually incurred loss of $14,000,000 for the year.

I. B. A. Elects E. F. Connelly New President

By the Associated Press

Del Monte, Calif., Oct. 13.—The Investment Bankers Association of America today heard a prediction of Government ownership of railroads, then named Emmett F. Connelly, of Detroit as president.

The convention's final session chose new governors, committee chairmen and heard the new president, who suceeds Jean Witter, of San Francisco, call for a greater interest in national affairs.

Connelly said bankers want neutrality, but "that depends on our ability to defend ourselves." For preparedness, he asserted bankers were determined to "remove every bottle neck, every restraining influence that stands in the way of the free flow of investment funds into industry."

The Government ownership prediction was made by the association's securities committee.

"The gradual financial disintegration of the transportation machine in the last few years of the depression has convinced well-informed students of the problem that Government ownership and operation of railroads will sooner or later be inevitable," the committee said. "Now the war might be an excuse to take them over."

The report added that if the war lasts a year, railroads would be asked to handle a greatly increased volume of traffic and whether the roads handle the job adequately would determine whether they would remain under private ownership.

Connelly pinned badges on 17 new governors. An entirely new slate of vice presidents included John Clark, Cleveland; Paul Davis, Chicago; Edward Hilliard, Louisville; Colis Mitchum, San Francisco, and Joseph Ripley, New York.

Lower Wheat Prices Reflect War Doubts

Early Buying Move Fades When Stocks Turn Downward

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Oct. 13.—Nervous price fluctuations in the grain market today mirrored the uncertain and unsettled trade situation accompanying the verbal war in Europe. Wheat fell a cent or more from early highs and closed fractionally lower than Wednesday.

Traders were on the sidelines awaiting some definite move in the European stalemate. With war by far the most important market factor, having been largely responsible for net gains at this time of 13 to 14 cents a bushel in wheat and 5 to 6 cents in corn since August 31, most dealers hesitated to change market positions pending more definite indictators of the extent of hostilities.

Early buying in response to news over the holiday and less favorable weather in the domestic belt lifted wheat as much as ⅝ cent but was disappointing to many would-be purchasers. Later when securities lost early gains the grain market followed with a reaction. December wheat fell from 83⅞ to 82⅞. Closing prices were ⅛ to ⅝ lower than Wednesday; December, 83⅛@83¼; May, 82½@82⅝.

Corn finished unchanged to ½ lower; December, 50; May, 52½@52⅝. Oats ⅛ off to ½ up. Rye, ½ to ¾ down. Soy beans, ½ to ⅝ higher, and lard unchanged to 10 higher.

Export business remained quiet, although Canada sold about 130,000 bushels to Norway. Argentine shipments increased the past week with this wheat quoted 9 cents a bushel cheaper than U. S. No. 1 hard at Antwerp. Domestic export sales for the three months period ended September 30 were reported at 16,735,000 bushels.

Cotton Futures Droop After Early Advance

New York, Oct. 13 (AP).—An early flurry of cotton futures soon fizzled out today and the market slowly gave way to hedging and outright liquidation. Final prices were unchanged to 6 points lower.

Many cotton brokers were frankly disappointed that the vigrous Chamberlain speech failed to ignite any speculative sparks, but traders apparently were taking the foreign news with a pinch of salt and refused to assume an aggressive market position either way. Distant months bore the brunt of selling despite the early lift given by foreign demand, which petered out when overseas markets closed.

Worth Street had little to add today to the week's tally of sales. Print cloth sales for the week were estimated at considerably below present output.

Virginia Tobacco Crop 31% Over Last Year

Better grades of tobacco were expected to appear on Virginia's flue-cured floors next week to boost prices above the 14-15 cent average during the opening week of sales.

The Virginia Cooperative Crop Reporting Service said yesterday the Old Dominion's flue-cured harvest, estimated at 93,775,000 pounds, was 31 per cent larger than last year's and 44 per cent above the 1927-1936 average.

Early Gains Wiped Out by Profit-Taking Rail Equipments Show Greatest Declines Trend Irregular in Bond Market

New York, Oct. 13.—Security markets today performed precisely according to the pattern of the last two weeks. Showing of strength in prices was met promptly by well distributed though light selling. Gains which ran to as much as 2 points at the start were canceled and the list as a whole closed fractionally lower with rail equipments showing the largest declines.

Forecasters and analysts once again were off the mark. Many of them had maintained that if Prime Minister Chamberlain's reply to the German peace proposal (on Hitler's terms) should be warlike and unyielding, markets would be shaken abruptly from the rut into which they have become bedded in recent weeks. The British leader's speech was quite as adamantine in tone as speculators in war stocks should have desired, but no broad price upturn developed. There was a renewed quest for explanations.

One group in the financial district emphasized that leading economists, since the start of the new war in Europe, have been busily engaged in pricking the bubble of profits in store for the United States and other neutrals from sales of materials and munitions to the belligerents.

Inflation Possibilities

In fact, the majority of these economists hold that American business would become dangerously inflated in a period during which industry would be geared to war economy; that the resultant slump, superimposed upon the already serious internal problems, including social, economic and labor, would be disastrous.

In addition to this view the feeling appears to be growing that the war, on the Western Front at least, may end abruptly through the necessity of Germany making concessions to halt Russia's wholesale successes from the Baltic to the Bosphorus; or if the war in the west is to continue, it will be on no extensive scale. Aside from shipping losses, Britain and France to date have been saving money and conserving strength. They apparently have a large surplus of war materials. Their operations so far have not made a potential market for imported materials and have, on the other hand, resulted in serious disruption of normal peacetime trade in the rest of the world. Many American manufacturers and trade groups already have suffered loss on this account.

Labor Problems

Whatever the psychological elements in current markets, however, it is evident that beneath superficial bullishness bearish factors are lurking. Aside from Europe's grave troubles, many here are worried over the labor situation. The Chrysler "slow down," which some managements describe as a form of sabotage, is a case in point.

It is recalled that interunion fights and management-labor disputes played a major part in stopping recovery in 1937 at a time when business seemed headed for 1929 levels. Associated with this question is the feeling throughout a large part of United States business that racketeering in labor—victimizing workers as well as employers—will not be effectively ended under the present Administration.

Aside from labor, industrial news was favorable. Carloadings for the October 7 week set a new high for the period since 1930, and Moody's industrial indices were at two-year highs. Sears-Roebuck reported record sales for the four weeks ended October 8. Various steel centers reported that operations would be maintained or advanced next week. Engineering construction awards for the October 12 week were up 31 per cent from the week before and 44 per cent ahead of the like period last year.

President Roosevelt's intimation that consideration is being given to gold loans by the United States to Latin-American nations interested the Street, more particularly as New Deal investigations of South American credits in pre-Roosevelt years made them look risky. Steps in this direction, it was suggested, would have to be taken on the basis of ability to pay, and with the self-evident need of stimulating foreign purchases of United States goods by increased buying from customer nations.

Aircraft stocks showed independent strength but such issues as Douglas lost early gains in late dealings. Martin, one of the actives, ended with a ⅝ rise while Curtiss-Wright was up ¼. General Motors and Chrysler were off moderately and steels moved narrowly. Phelps Dodge, New York Airbrake, Texas Corporation and Case were losers of about a point each. American Can gave up 2⅜ and International Nickel 1⅛.

The pound and franc again were under severe pressure in foreign exchange dealings. Sterling was off more than 7 cents at the finish. Scandinavian currencies also dipped, though more moderately. Cotton was unchanged to 8 points lower while wheat eased ⅛ to ⅝ cents.

Uncertainties in other sections of the financial community with respect to the European situation were reflected in the bond market today where price movements were mixed and volume of dealings moderate.

Fluctuations in Treasurys were characteristic of much of the market. The Government bonds at first showed some signs of weakness and the close on the stock exchange showed gains and losses fairly evenly divided. The strengthening of the market became more apparent in the over-counter section where final quotations were almost uniformly above Wednesday's close with advances running up to 9/32.

Foreign bonds attracted somewhat more attention than on Wednesday with Norwegian and Danish issues under some pressure in active dealings. Losses there ranged up 2 points and more. Belgians also sold down rather abruptly in sizable volume. Canadians were inclined to be firm.

Total turnover on the stock exchange was $6,727,000, against $6,115,000 on Wednesday, with Treasurys at $573,000 against $454,000. The average for 30 bonds showed a gain of 0.06 point on the day. Industrials were the best in the domestic section, showing a rise of 0.42 in the average. Convertible steel issues, such as Bethlehem and Republic, improved.

Public utility loans were about steady with a loss of 0.02 point. Rails also showed a decline, the better grade issues being down 0.19 point, while the second grades fared somewhat better with a decline of 0.12 point in the average. Strength in many of the Great Northern issues was among the best features in this section.

Boston, Oct. 13 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. of Agr.).—Business was very slow in the Boston wool market today. Purchases of domestic wools were confined largely to small quantities for urgent needs. Prices on these transactions were steady compared with sales early in the week, but steady to slightly lower than last week. Users interested in making commitments ahead of actual needs for fine wools were giving their attention largely to offerings for import from South Africa, where quotations were reported comparatively lower than current quotations on similar quality domestic wools.

Labor Problem Looms With Business Rise

Possible Advance in Living Costs Brings Wages to Forefront

New York, Oct. 13.—Labor problems have been overshadowed in recent weeks by spectacular war news and by the dramatic climb of business. The commercial rise in industrial activity now forcibly draws attention to labor because of looming shortages of skilled workers, the Standard Statistics Co. says today in a study of the current situation.

Price increases not only create inventory problems for company executives but also make employes price-conscious. Demands for wage raises always accompany a rising cost of living. It is the potential, rather than the actual, rise in the cost of living that worries labor.

Both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. meet in convention this month to formulate plans of attack. Furthermore, on October 24, American industry generally must step up to the second level prescribed under the fair labor standards act.

The new conditions imposed by the war boom apparently will spur the activities of the A. F. of L. and C. I. O., and will make the restraints laid on business by the hours provisions of the fair labor standards act a still greater handicap. At the same time, continued prosperity could make an anachronism of the wage section of this law.

The significance of the enactment of recent State legislation designed to curb union extremists is not lost on labor's leaders. They realize that public annoyance at aggressive tactics has been mounting in recent months. This trend will be strengthened as we move into a quasi-war economy. If we should actually enter the war, labor controls are scheduled to be imposed immediately. Labor's zero hour is fast approaching. Gains must be made now if they are to be made at all.

Labor has one tactical advantage which it undoubtedly will press. Neither Congress nor the Administration will willingly antagonize labor, with the 1940 elections coming up. Thus, unless questions of national security intervene, it is thought unlikely that far-reaching changes will be made in the Wagner act in the next 12 months, despite the special investigation being made of this law by a committee of the House of Representatives.

Idle Bank Funds Mount to New Peak

By the Associated Press

A new record high of lendable excess bank reserves, $5,400,000,000, was reported yesterday by the Federal Reserve Board, which said that the total, which was $40,000,000 more than a week ago, had risen recently because deficit spending of the Treasury had been putting more money into circulation. The process may be reversed next week, when the Treasury will start taking money out of circulation by borrowing $30,000,000 a week to build up its cash balance.

Forget Modern Ideas to Learn, Urges Dr. Heyl

Scientists Told to Put Selves in Position of 17th Century Scholars

Scientists of today might well find new vistas of learning if they temporarily rid themselves of modern concepts and imagine themselves in the position of the seventeenth or seventeenth century scholar, Dr. Paul Heyl told the Society of Rheology last night.

The noted Bureau of Standards physicist, who won acclaim several years ago as "the man who weighed the earth," reminded the society members that while science has scored many advances in the last century, many mysteries remain to be solved.

The electron is one of these problems, said Dr. Heyl. Physicists today know about momentum and kinetic energy, which their seventeenth century predecessors didn't, but theirs is now the task of deciding whether the electron is a particle or train of waves.

Dr. Heyl addressed the society's dinner meeting at the Wardman Park Hotel. Earlier in the day a symposium on rheology, the science relating to the flow of matter, was held at the Bureau of Standards.

False teeth, automobile tires and rock formations of the earth were among the subjects of the morning symposium.

Dr. Wilmer Souder, Bureau of Standards specialist in dental materials, reported that while amalgam fillings for cavities have been successfully standardized, there has not yet been developed a natural color false plate which would not lose its shape.

The reason for this, he explained, is that the alloys in these natural color plates flow, or sag, under pressure. This problem of flow has been conquered in the manufacture of amalgam but the person requiring a full denture still has to choose between one which is darker than his gums, but wears well, or the type that is a perfect match with the gums but can't stand up under constant use.

Dr. L. H. Adams, director of the Geophysical Laboratory of the Carnegie Institution, described how even the earth's bedrock is subject to flow under pressure. The flow of rock, he said, is a distinct problem of geology and must be considered in connection with changes in the contours of the mountains and ocean floors.

Scientific processes of tire manufacture probably will be revolutionized by the development of synthetic rubber products, the society was told by J. H. Dillon, Firestone Tire and Rubber Co.

The meeting will end this morning.

Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress presents the Gordon String Quartet (Jacques Gordon, David Sackson, William Lincer and Naoum Benditzki) in the Coolidge Auditorium Friday night. Program: Quartet in G major, Op. 77, No. 1 (Haydn); Quartet in D minor, Op. 70 (Aleksandr Glazunov); Quartet in F minor, Op. 95 (Beethoven).

Autumnal activities of the Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundation in the Library of Congress began last evening with a concert by the Gordon String Quartet, and Coolidge Auditorium was, as a matter of course, filled to capacity with devotees of chamber music. Jacques Gordon and his colleagues were in prime condition technically, and played an enjoyable program with a zest that did not flag for a moment. Spirited as their performance was, it had as well a finesse in interpretation that indicated an increased unanimity.

Their first offering was Haydn's G major quartet from Opus 77, a work which proves that on the mental plane a man is as old as he feels. Haydn was 67 when he composed this vivacious and euphonious quartet, which has but one movement suggestive of the meditations of age. The adagio has a solemnity almost ecclesiastical and a tinge of melancholy in its grave pace, but it is only a momentary pause before rushing into the jovial humor of the minuet and the finale, both of which are presto in their headlong flight.

The companion piece in the first part of the program was Alexsandr Glazunov's fifth quartet in D minor, a romantic work of uneven inspiration, with most of the creative impulse concentrated in the first two movements. There are interesting ideas in the opening andante, which serves as a fugal introduction to a poetic allegro, and the scherzo sparkles with a lively wit. But in the overlong adagio movement the initial energy expends itself and the concluding allegro seems to be a vain attempt to recapture the creative mood.

For the end of the concert was reserved Beethoven's "Quaretto Serioso" in F minor, which Mendelssohn thought was the most characteristic music that Beethoven ever wrote. If by characteristic he meant revelatory of Beethoven's personal idiosyncracies, he was in a considerable extent right. The music is at times as roughly humorous as a practical joke; the wit is grim and the poesy imbued with a brooding ire, yet there are occasional passages of deep tenderness. The work reminds one of Beethoven's letters to Nikolaus Zmeskall, to whom it is dedicated.

The curt phrase is unison with which the quartet opens and the compression of style that marks the first movement give a vivid impression of Beethoven's vitality. The allegretto in D major surprisingly floats into a sweetness, pensive in its mood, while the contrasting scherzo alternates between an utter recklessness and a resignation to the blows of fate. The short larghetto which precedes the finale is a condensation of tragic despair which turns at once to a rollicking gayety, and the movement closes with a burst of laughter in the vein of Rossini.

Ford Sterling Dies Of a Heart Attack

Los Angeles, Oct. 13 (INS).—Ford Sterling, 56, famous in motion pictures during the 'teen years as chief of the keystone kops, died tonight, reportedly from a heart attack.

The actor had been in hospital since June, 1938, suffering from thrombosis of the veins, which necessitated the amputation of his left leg several months ago.

18-Foot Boat Sinking in Mid-Atlantic, Sailor Permits His Rescue After Argument

Italian Liner Belvedere Takes American Off, However, Reluctantly

Hoboken, N. J., Oct. 13 (AP).—The Italian freighter Belvedere docked today, bringing with it Guy C. Avery, 35, of Tampa, Fla., rescued off the Azores on October 2 after a voyage of nearly five months in the Atlantic Ocean in an open 18-foot sailboat.

Avery, who declined to discuss his trip, was picked up about 300 miles off the Azores only after officers of the Belvedere talked with him for more than an hour and his tiny craft began to sink.

Captain Romano Tomicich said Avery would be taken to Newport News, Va., to bring him nearer Tampa. The captain said Avery left Bermuda for Genoa, Italy, and apparently encountered difficulty.

He said the steering gear of the Miss Tampa was damaged and the craft was in need of repair.

A young newspaperwoman aboard the Belvedere, Miss Lola Taddei, of the Il Lavaro, of Genoa, said Avery told her the Belvedere's whistle "aroused me from a day dream." She said he told of being without food and water several days and of extinguishing a fire aboard the boat several days before.

"He didn't want to come aboard and argued with officers of our ship," she said. "Finally, when the mast of his boat struck the side of the Belvedere and broke he had to climb up. When the Miss Tampa went down it took with it most of his belongings.

"When he started to walk on our deck it was with difficulty. He wore only swimming pants and a sweater. Members of the crew gave him clothes. His beard was red and four inches long."

Avery was clean shaven when the Belvedere arrived.

Miss Taddei, an attractive blonde, said Avery had been sighted on August 13 by the American Export liner Exeter, but he refused aid at the time.

Courage that Guy C. Avery (inset), of Tampa, Fla., displayed when he set out five months ago to cross the Atlantic remained with him to the last stage of his perilous journey. Although his tiny craft was sinking and he was without food, Avery was reluctant to be rescued. In this picture, made from the deck of the Italian freighter Belvedere when Avery was sighted off the Azores, a member of the ship's crew climbs down to assist him. Avery argued an hour with the Belvedere's officers before he would allow them to take him aboard

Ready to Fight Sabotage, Murphy Says

Civil Liberties Group Told Rights Will Not Be Infringed

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Oct. 13.—Attorney General Frank Murphy, at a dinner in the Hotel Biltmore tonight, told the National Conference on Civil Liberties that, in the present emergency, the Government was determined to prevent sabotage and subversive activities in order to keep us out of war and safeguard the security of the Nation, but was equally determined not to infringe upon any individual's civil rights in doing so. He said it would avoid the mistakes and "wrongs against liberty that were done in the name of patriotism" in the World War.

"We must not fall victim to the infection of despotism that in recent years has been sweeping the world," he added, "for if we suppress civil liberty we suppress democracy itself."

J. Warren Madden, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, denied charges that it had been "more than a little careless of the civil liberties" of employers with respect to their rights of free speech and free press. He asserted that orders prohibiting employers from influencing employes against joining unions by written or oral statements had been based upon Supreme Court decisions restraining union leaders or members from speaking or publishing against the interests of employers.

"In our zeal to protect ourselves from internal aggression," Murphy said, "we must be on guard that we ourselves are not guilty of aggression against the civil liberties of our own citizens."

Saying that some sincere individuals believed that it was not possible to maintain both civil liberties and a strong defense against internal attack at a time like this, but that civil rights must be temporarily suppressed, or an ineffective internal defense accepted, he continued:

"I do not believe that we face any such choice. I do not believe that a democracy must necessarily become something other than a democracy in order to protect its national interests. I am convinced that if the job is done right—if the defense against internal aggression is carefully prepared—our people need not suffer the tragic things that have happened elsewhere in the world and that we have seen, in less degree, even in this land of freedom. We can prevent and punish the abuse of liberty by sabotage, disorder and violence without destroying liberty itself."

He pledged that the work of combatting espionage, now coordinated under the Department of Justice, would be carried on "not by overzealous, inexperienced laymen, but by men who have been equipped for their work by careful training."

"There will be no alignment with agents or vigilante groups of private industrial organizations which are concerned primarily with industrial disputes and labor problems," he went on. "Enforcement officials will themselves obey the law of the land."

He urged all State and local as well as Federal officials and private citizens to keep their heads and support the Government in its resolve not to abandon the Bill of Rights in any measures against subversive activities.

The Attorney General also promised that sabotage, violence and subversive activities would be dealt with "vigorously and according to law."

Teamster Chiefs Post Bond Here

Five officers of a Washington local of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters appeared yesterday in the District Court to post bond for their trial on a criminal conspiracy indictment.

Thomas O'Brien, a representative of the international union, put up $1,000. Bonds of $500 each were posted by four officers of Local 639 of the union. They were Charles J. Bell, president; Stuart M. Keyser, recording secretary; Linwood A. Trainham, secretary-treasurer, and Aubrey Z. Stream, business representative.

Allied-Turkish Treaty Frees Russia's Hands

Terms Freeze Italy's Neutrality, Slow Nazi Drive to Black Sea

By John B. Reston.

Copyright by New York Times.

London, Oct. 13.—The Anglo-French treaty with Turkey, now in the signature stage, tends, it was learned today, to freeze Italian neutrality in the Mediterranean and put a further brake on the German thrust toward the Black Sea, and to leave Russia free for her adventure in eastern Europe.

Waiting only for the conclusion of the present Turko-Russian talks in Moscow, and not necessarily depending on their success, the Anglo-French-Turkish treaty is said in responsible circles to include these five main points:

In event of any act leading to war in the Mediterranean area (which is interpreted as meaning mainly that, in the event that Italy enters the war on the side of Germany) Great Britain, France and Turkey will lend each other all the assistance in their power.

Turkey to Receive Loans

In case of war between Russia on one hand, and Great Britain and France on the other, Turkey will "in no circumstances" be required to declare war or fight against Soviet Russia.

In the event that Great Britain and France are forced to fulfill their obligations to Rumania and Greece, Turkey will co-operate in every way compatible with the obligation not to fight against Russia.

Great Britain and France will give Turkey an unspecified amount of financial help and will as soon as possible deliver to her an unspecified amount of those materials most necessary to carry on a modern war.

Great Britain and France will get the use of the Turkish ports, but the agreement will in no way contravene the Montreux Convention, which limits the passage of warships through the Dardanelles.

It is obvious to all observers here that this treaty is directed mainly against Germany, and probably the most significant thing about it is that it is evidently going through soon, without any complaint from, and indeed with the benevolent approval of, Josef Stalin, who recently has been protesting his desire to promote German aims.

Stalin Objects to Wording

Instead, Stalin seems to have looked at the Turkish agreement with the western powers entirely from the Soviet point of view. When Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu went to Moscow with a draft of the treaty—already initialed by himself and the British and French Ambassadors in Turkey—it was stated reliably here that Stalin objected to the wording of the treaty. That draft contained clauses stating that in the event of Great Britain and France getting into a war with Russia, Turkey, under her agreement with Great Britain and France "would not be obliged to fight Russia." Russia objected to this, and suggested that the wording be changed to read, that Turkey "in no circumstances" would declare war against Russia under the terms of the treaty.

This Russian suggestion was passed on to the British and French, with a Turkish notation, that if Great Britain and France were not prepared to make the change, Turkey was willing to stick to the original draft.

The British and French, however, pointed out that the treaty was never directed against Russia, and accepted the Russian suggestions.

Army Selects Veterans for Streamlining

Older Officers Chosen To Command 5 New Divisions for Training

By the Associated Press

The Army selected veteran officers yesterday to command the five new "streamlined" divisions which are to be welded by special winter training into a corps ready for combat.

The five include Maj. Gen. Walter Krueger, an Ohioan, who already commands the experimental Second Division at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and Maj. Gen. Walter C. Sweeney, a West Virginian, who commands the Third Division, with headquarters at Fort Lewis, Wash.

The selections represented an apparent departure from recent policy of favoring younger men, as the youngest, Gen. Krueger, is 57, Gen. Sweeney will reach the retirement age of 65, 13 months hence.

The other commanders are: First Division, Fort Hamilton, N. Y., Brig. Gen. Walter C. Short, 59, a native of Fillmore, Ill.; Fifth, Fort Sheridan, Ill., Brig. Gen. Campbell B. Hodges, 58, a Louisianan, and, Sixth, Fort Lewis, Brig. Gen. Clement A. Trott, 62, who was born in Milwaukee.

The corps commander for the entire group and auxiliary troops was not announced. The selection of division commanders coincided with these other War Department steps to expand and re-enforce the army:

Twenty-five engineer officers were ordered shifted from rivers and harbors and flood control posts to service with new combat regiments. About a dozen others of the 240 engineer officers on civil duty are to be transferred, officials said.

Orders are being drafted for more than 8,000 motor trucks, light combat cars and other vehicles, expected to cost some $15,000,000, to put the new divisions on wheels.

Plans have been completed to organize four new Coast Artillery antiaircraft regiments, but details were not announced.

The projected move of the Sixty-first Coast Artillery Regiment and antiaircraft unit from Fort Sheridan, Ill., to the harbor defenses of Portland, Me., was canceled without explanation. The regiment was to have replaced the Fifth Infantry, which is scheduled to sail for Panama next week.

CCC Inspector Dies in Crash

A 38-year-old CCC inspector for the United States Forestry Service was killed in a traffic accident in the Rockville pike yesterday.

Harold F. Kurtz, of Rockville, who was returning home from Washington early in the morning, was killed when his car ran off the road and crashed into a fruit stand just north of the intersection of Rockville pike and Old Georgetown road.

Mr. Kurtz had been suffering from low blood pressure for some time, and Montgomery County police believed he may have fainted or fallen asleep at the wheel. A native of Rochester, N. Y., and a graduate of Syracuse University, he had been in Government service for several years. He had served with the CCC and the Resettlement Administration before joining the Forestry Service. He had lived in Rockville for two years.

Mr. Kurtz leaves his wife, Dorothy, executive secretary of the Montgomery County Welfare Board. Mrs. Kurtz left last night for Rochester, where funeral services and burial will be held.

Scholar-Priest Urges Prayer To Bring Peace

Fr. Garrigou-Lagrange Addresses 500 in Latin at Catholic U.

The Rev. Reginald Garrigou-Lagrange, O. P., last night called for a crusade of prayer as the only way to bring about a true and permanent peace.

The French scholar-priest gave his first American address last night at Catholic University, before more than 500 local and visiting clerics. Leading theologians from all over the country came to join the audience, which crowded the auditorium in McMahon Hall to the windowsills.

The Pope, said Father Garrigou-Lagrange, has called upon all the faithful in the world to "join their hearts in a universal prayer for peace." Peace can be obtained by praying for the spiritual needs all people have in common, he said, quoting St. Augustine's statement that "while the same material goods can not belong simultaneously and integrally to many people, the same spiritual goods can be had by all."

The venerable priest spoke in Latin. The greater part of his speech was a discussion of the Eucharist, "the bond between the minds and hearts of all the faithful," and on this theological basis he appealed for prayers for peace.

Father Garrigou-Lagrange was introduced by the Rev. Dr. Joseph Fenton, and at the end of his speech the Rev. Dr. Edward Fitzgerald, dean of the School of Theology, thanked him on the part of the school and the university. Also on the speaker's platform were the Very Rev. Bernard Walker, principal of the Dominican House of Studies, the Rev. Dr. M. J. Egan, the Rev. Dr. Robert J. Slavin, the Rev. Dr. M. T. Benez, and the Right Rev. Mgr. Francis Haas, members of the faculty of the university.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The most trying partner of all is the incurable optimist who announces as you spread your hand: "We didn't bid enough. We have a slam," only to freeze that smile on your face as he trips lightly through the play, squandering tricks and winding up down one or two.

F. K. Perkins, Boston expert, told us about today's hand, in which declarer, believing he and his partner had not bid enough, and that he had tricks to spend ended up losing his contract of four spades.

He let the opponents, who weren't sleeping on the job, take away the trumps from dummy, removing his chance for ruffing and leaving him with losers.

Would you fall into the same trap? Plan the play before reading how not to do it.

According to Mr. Perkins, West led a heart, which was taken by dummy's ace, and the ace of clubs was played, on which the remaining heart was discarded from the South hand.

Declarer now led a diamond and took the finesse, which lost to West. He was not dismayed by losing the finesse, but when West returned a trump his heart began to beat a little faster.

He won the trump in dummy and played a low diamond toward the ace, but East stepped in with the swiftness of a serpent, ruffed the diamond and led his last spade, clearing the board of trumps.

Declarer was now left with the ace and two losing diamonds and no trumps on which to park them. He was set one, losing three diamonds and a trump trick when he had predicted that he might make a grand slam.

To make sure of his contract, South should have refused the diamond finesse, and after discarding the heart, should have played the ace and a low diamond. One trump could be drawn from dummy, but there would still be a spade remaining for declarer to trump a losing diamond and win his bid.

Chapter 21

Making a rendezvous with the Barney girls for dinner the next evening, he left them far uptown at the door of Cousin Ann's ring-and-walk-up apartment house, and drove on to his own small old hotel near Washington Square. The smother of snow through which they had driven as far south as Peekskill had turned into a cold down pour of rain. The lights from the shop windows, the street lamps, and the criss-crossing automobiles were reflected in dizzy swirls on the wet glass of his car windows. After the spacious emptiness of country roads in winter he found the rushing riptide of city traffic hard on his nerves, and his annoyance at feeling nervous woke up to querulous life his vanity which in his usual laborious routine found so few stimulants either to joy or pain as to give him little trouble. He was rather startled by the trouble it gave him now when he was too busy to cope with it, peering through the rain at the traffic lights, trying to see in three directions at once, gripping his steering wheel too tightly, nodding with a propitiatory smile at traffic policemen. When his country license caught their eyes, they looked quickly from it up at him with an expression he took as a sneer. Waiting beside a taxi for a traffic signal to change, he saw that the driver, lounging fat and loose-bellied on his seat, was leaning toward him to say something. Hoping for an inside tip about driving regulations, and keeping his eyes fixed on the red light, he lent an anxious ear. The goodnatured voice said, "Take it easy, Vermont! They won't bite!" Timothy was mortified to find himself almost ready to snarl back foolishly, "I knew this town before you were born."

BUT HE DID not know it now. A street temptingly empty opened to his right. He turned into it as into sanctuary, but after only a few feet of rolling solitude, some shabby little children playing on the sidewalk shrieked collectively at him. "Hey, Mister, can't you read? This is a one-way s t r e e t! Lookit his license! Say, kids, where's Vermont?" Their voices, that were only shrill, sounded mocking to him. Startled by his mistake, he slipped his clutch, brought his car roughly to a stop, remembered that he could neither back out nor turn around, flung his lever into low speed with a grinding of nervous gears and started forward. The children, sharp-faced and mournfully knowing-eyed, stopped their play again to stare at the jerking car. He read derision into their silent gaze and nettled vanity wet his forehead and began to crumple his collar and sweat. Still gripping the steering wheel too hard, stooping his tall frame to peer through the low windshield for a possible traffic light, he all but ran into a pushcart loaded with empty crates, left standing by the curb. Wrenching at the wheel and careening to the left to avoid this, he saw with horror that he had gone by a red light, and strained his ears guiltily for an angry whistle. But for once no traffic cop was near.

The rest of the trip downtown was a series of crises inexpertly met; he parked too far from the curb at the hotel; the doorman lifted his eyebrows at the three-year-old Ford; the hotel clerk was disdainfully silent when he said he'd have one of the cheapest rooms. Out of moral cowardice he grossly overtipped the bell boy who showed him to his dingy cell. Left alone he looked into the mirror and saw that his collar was not right, and that he must start the next day with a visit to a New York barber to efface the rusticity of his Clifford haircut.

"I must come to the city more often, by God, I must!" he said aloud, his bruised vanity throbbing like a stepped-on corn. How shabby his ancient pigskin bag was now, which only an hour b e f o r e had looked upper-class and "county," with its mellow saddle-soaped leather, compared with the dented pasteboard suitcase of the Barney girls.

It was late, he went to bed, but as he closed his eyes a mob of cars bore down on him with all their headlights glaring, and every time he turned restlessly over to avoid them, he saw only two young provincials with hats that were uncouth because they showed an amount of the forehead that was right last year. But he was tired and finally fell asleep. And during this sleep his mind took charge, opened the right switch and shunted him back from the Clifford to the New York rails and from the quivering dramatic miseries of adolescence to the monotonous, unexpectant, self-confidence of maturity. When he woke up he was an old New York boy back in New York.

AND GLAD to be there, relieved to have the tiresome mechanisms of daily life run invisibly by people of whose membership in his own race he need not be reminded. His cheap room was dingy, yes, but it was an anonymous back that bent to shovel the coal into the fire that kept it warm. That back could ache with overwork, could break in exhaustion, but because he would never know whose back it was, he would be safe from the nagging summons of moral responsibility. How restful city life was! The plumbing in the battered bathroom was old-fashioned but if the pipes froze or burst, it would be a figure in blue jeans whose face he need never see, whose wages might be fair or unfair for all we knew, who would toil till the repairs were made. In the morning when he let himself out of his door the man in the next room was just entering his. T. C. reveled in the stony indifference with which their eyes crossed. He might be going out to jump in the river; the other man might be going in to cut his throat—and no intrusive interest taken by either one. Neither would ever know or care. Nor anybody else. It was delightful to breathe in this rarefied air of irresponsibility, compared to the unremitting density of the rural consciousness that everybody else is human. The old city boy walked with a light step through the bell boys in the lobby, who would, no matter how disagreeable to them he made himself, give him accurately the service he had cash to pay for; he glanced at the opaque face of the waiter who came to take his order for breakfast and thought, "Your wife may have been killed in an automobile accident last night, or have run away with another man, but I don't have to take on your troubles in addition to my own." What a vacation it was to get away from the crowding closeness of country life to the decent isolation and privacy of the city. Yes, I must really plan to come more often, he thought, opening his morning paper like a civilized being at half past eight in the morning instead of like a hick at half past four in the afternoon.

He had meant to take at least two days, perhaps three, for his various errands, remembering his old city-scorn of country people who crammed too much into short visit, and then blamed for their fatigue and bewilderment—not their own bad planning but New York ways. But it had been evident that a single day had seemed an almost sinful extravagance to the Barney girls with Delia's college years to be financed. He had hastily revised his trip to suit them, planning to do by letter or telephone many of the things he had thought to do in person. Even so, the day ahead of him was formidably full. After a shuddering glance at the headlined news of Fascist bombing of civilians in Spain and yet more Nazi savagery in Germany, he laid down the paper to plan his comings and goings. His city lore about subways, elevated trains, and busses came freshly to his mind, and with it the unsurprised city acceptance of the need to spend large sections of each day in being hurled from one place to another. After breakfast he stepped out to a branch of the same shop where he had bought his clothes when he was in college, bought some new collars and a smarter tie, and coming back to the hotel put them on with preoccupied confidence in their rightness, giving only his usual 45-year-old glance in the mirror to see that they were in place. In the barber's chair he sat somberly dreading his call on Mr. Wheaton, rebuking by his inattention the barber's urban grin over the length and odd cut of his hair. And when, close-trimmed and clipped and shaven, he stood up to go, he tipped the man, firmly, unapologetically, a dime and nickel, no more. Shrugging his overcoat on absent-mindedly, he looked at his memorandum to verify the address of the chic hotel where he was to meet a Jewish mother who had written to propose her son as a student.

IN THE SUBWAY as he gazed at the wooden faces of the people opposite him, he gave himself another moment of city elation that he need feel no responsibility for their welfare, and then set his mind to work on the first call he was to make. Of course the fact that Mrs. Bernstein wanted her boy to leave the expensive New Jersey prep school and enter another, even before the end of the first semester, meant that something was the matter with young Jules. But it might turn out to be something which a needy rural academy could afford to overlook. He wondered how anyone living in a Park avenue hotel had ever heard of the Academy. Clifford was by this time so far away that he himself could barely remember that it existed. Well, there had been of late years, off and on, a few Jewish students at the Academy. Perhaps one of them had mentioned Clifford. Although, he thought 15 minutes later, looking around the department store elegance of the private sitting room, certainly none of those former students ever lived in any such expensive hotel as this.

The door opened, Mrs. Bernstein came in. All of T. C.'s Scotch blood curdled, and all his New England experience bared its teeth at the first sight of her—too handsome, too fashionably dressed, too articulate, with an aroma of fluent insincerity that was almost innocent so open was it, as if she lived in a world where it was taken for granted, like the law of gravity. She assumed at once the manner of intimate friendship. With a reflex he could not control, the obscure schoolteacher from Vermont grew more frosty as she waxed more cordial. He was shocked by his own bad manners. He would not have spoken to the town drunkard in Clifford as curtly as he put the necessary questions to this opulently beautiful woman, nor fixed so insolently cold an eye on any human being in Windward County.

He wanted just one thing from her, to know what was the matter with Jules; and as he expected, that was the thing she had no intention of telling him. Had Jules passed all his examinations? "Oh, yes, indeed, Prof. Hulme, you'll find him a very bright student. Why, I've had teachers tell me that they never had such a——"

Silent and saturnine under the flood of her quotations from the many teachers who had thought Jules the very brightest boy they had ever seen, Prof. Hulme waited, at first for the end of her monologue, then only for the end of a sentence, and finally waited no longer but interrupted her flatly with his request to see the boy's report card.

"Oh, I have it right here, Prof. Hulme. I knew that with a careful person like you that would be the first thing you'd ask for." The card came out, warm and perfumed, from a petit-point bag on her satin lap.

He gave one look at it. "But, Mrs. Bernstein, there are no marks on it for the before-vacation examinations."

"Ah, trust your experienced eye, Prof. Hulme, to see that at a glance. Ha! Ha! Ha! Anyone can see you know all about . . . "

The flood poured down again, on and on, flattery, cajolery, side issues without end. Prof. Hulme waited, looking stonily out of the window, writing grimly on his bony face, "The answer to my question, if you please!"

Finally when she could ignore his expression no longer, "Well, the point really is, Prof. Hulme, that at Brentwood they don't give the boys examinations before they go home for the winter vacation. They don't think it good for the adolescent nervous system to have to go through such a strain, just when"—the faucet opened yet more widely—"modern psychiatrists . . . the defeat complex . . . "

Timothy waited again. No break at all occurred in the barrier of talk this time. He looked rudely at his watch. She talked more rapidly. He held it to his ear, with no effect. At last he broke through by raising his voice to say, "Well, then I'd like to see his report for the last year."

"Oh, really! I'm so sorry. I never dreamed you'd care to see that. Let me see. I don't believe I have kept it. Or if I have, I wouldn't know where to find it. Living in a hotel . . . you country people with your great roomy houses and attics, you can't imagine how hard it is for us poor city people with no place to go . . . "

LETTING THE FLUENT words pour on and on past his ear rather than into it, T. C. looked up to the ceiling and considered. Then, making no pretense that he was not interrupting her, he said, "Mrs. Bernstein, I'm afraid I'll have to telephone to Brentwood to get your son's record. They always keep complete records, I know. I could get it in a few minutes."

With a stirring of her sleekly corseted body that was not so much a flutter as an uncoiling, she said in agitation, "Well, I'll see—I might be able to find it."

After a moment of search in the desk drawer she drew the missing card out and reluctantly showed it. It had, of course, a record of the results of examinations taken before the last Christmas vacation. Prof. Hulme laid it down on the elegant little desk and looked at Jules' mother—from the North Pole.

She threw herself on his mercy. She was a widow, she cried brokenly, giving her whole life to her fatherless boy. All she wanted was his happiness. If she had tried to deceive the professor, it was as any mother would lay down her life for her child, for . . .

After a time, "What was the matter with Jules' examinations this year?" asked Mr. Hulme.

Pressing a handkerchief against her eyes, she implored him, "Don't hold this against Jules! He'd kill himself if he knew that his poor mamma had . . . He's always telling me that . . . "
